TO OUR READERS.

A principal object in collecting the materials arranged in this publication was to obtain information relative to our native town, by an inspection of its public records.

The interest created by their perusal determined us to embody their contents, with an intention of publishing the result of our researches, should that design be countenanced by a subscription sufficiently large to justify the experiment.

At the adjourned annual meeting of the present year, the question of publication was decided by a vote, granting one copy to each tax-payer in town.*

Every inhabitant will, in consequence, be enabled to peruse a summary account of the settlement and progress of their now flourishing location, amidst whose formerly dense forests their adventurous ancestors established their abodes, without the trouble of tracing particulars through the records one hundred and nine years.

To the inhabitants of Dunbarton, for whose consideration it is particularly intended, this Production is respectfully inscribed by their often

Obliged friend and

Most obedient servant,

THE AUTHOR.

* VOTE OF THE TOWN. Voted, That the selectmen appropriate a sufficient sum of money to procure for each tax-payer in town a copy of the History of Dunbarton, now being written by Caleb Stark.

A true copy—Attest:

CHARLES KIMBALL, Town-Clerk.

The foregoing is a copy of a vote passed March 17th, 1860, at a meeting of the inhabitants of Dunbarton.

HISTORY OF DUNBARTON.

THE incidents attending the settlement and onward progress of an inland agricultural town, cannot be expected to interest others than its residents, or the descendants of its early proprietors, the "forefathers of the hamlet," whose honored graves are located amidst the scenes of their former toil.

Their indomitable resolution and life-enduring labors cleared away the wild forests, and destroyed or expelled their wilder occupants, the wily human savage, as also the ferocious animals that prowled at will amid their solitudes. They prepared the pleasant fields and pastures now adorning our hill-sides and valleys, for the peaceable enjoyment of their posterity.

The fortunate possessors of this fair domain, whose acquisition was attended by neither toil or danger, cannot too highly appreciate the noble sacrifices and cheerfully encountered perils of the stalwart pioneers who transmitted to them so goodly an heritage. They were truly, in the words of the Scottish bard,

"Types of a race that shall the invader scorn,
As rocks resist the billows round their shore ;
Types of a race that shall to time unborn,
Their country leave unconquered, as of yore."

This location is noticed in Haywood's New-England Gazetteer as follows :

"DUNBARTON; MERRIMACK Co. This town lies nine miles south-west from Concord, and seven miles south-east from Hopkinton. Population in 1830, 1067. The situation of the town is somewhat elevated, though there are but few hills, nor any mountains. The air is clear, the water is good, and the health of its inhabitants seldom interrupted by sickness. The soil is good; peculiarly suited for corn, wheat, and orcharding. Almost every lot in town is capable of making a good farm. The farmers here have good buildings, and are excellent husbandmen. The advantages in point of water privileges are not great. The inhabitants are principally descendants of the Scotch-Irish, so called, from the north of Ireland. Their descendants still retain many traits of character peculiar to that people.

“Dunbarton was granted, in 1751, to Archibald Stark. Its present name (formerly Starkstown) is derived from Dunbarton, in Scotland, whence Stark emigrated. The first settlement was made about 1749. William Stinson, born in Ireland, came to Londonderry with his father. He was much respected, and was a useful man. James Rogers was from Ireland, and father to Major Robert Rogers. He was shot in the woods, being mistaken for a bear.”

We will add to the above, that the scenery of this place is diversified with many considerable elevations, fertile valleys, and meadows, watered by numerous small streams. A portion of its territory affords excellent pastures. The extensive landscape prospects from the high lands in different parts of the town are very interesting, particularly those presented to view from the hill upon which the meeting-house and central village are located. From that height the White Mountains, one hundred miles distant, are at times distinctly visible.

Mill sites are furnished by several ponds, and small streams issuing from or flowing into them. The principal ponds are Gorham's, Kimball's, and Long Pond. These, with a smaller one called Purgatory Pond, are situated in the southern and south-eastern quarters of the town. Stark's mill pond lies about mid way of its western border line, from which it is distant the length of two lots. This township is considered one of the most healthy in the county. Many of its inhabitants have lived to advanced ages. The widow of Capt. Joseph Leach was the oldest person who ever died in this place. She attained the age of one hundred and two years. She died June 20, 1849.

The inhabitants of Dunbarton are principally farmers, good liver, and generally in comfortable, independent circumstances. Population in 1850, 915. Valuation in 1854, $387,984. In another portion of this volume may be found Dr. Jackson's report of a vein of arsenic, discovered in the eastern section of this town, on the estate of Stephen Wheeler.

The first settlement is supposed to have been made by James Rogers and Joseph Putney. The precise time is not known, although probably several years prior to 1746. They established their families on the border of a large meadow called the "Great Meadow," erected log-houses, and planted apple trees, which had so far advanced towards maturity as to produce fruit, when a body of Indians appeared in the vicinity of Rumford (Concord).

Two friends from that place traced their way in the night, by spotted trees, through the forest, to the "Great Meadow," to notify them of the impending danger. Upon the receipt of this intelligence they at once abandoned their homes, and, by a speedy retreat to Rumford during the same night, insured their personal safety. Returning in the course of the next day, to drive their cattle to the Rumford garrison, they found them all slaughtered, and lying scattered around in every direction. Their houses had been plundered and burned, and their apple trees, with one exception,* cut down.

In 1749, Messrs. Putney and Rogers made a permanent settlement, having resided at Rumford during the three previous years. The year 1746 was memorable in consequence of the massacre on the Hopkinton road, which occurred on the morning of August 11, 1746, near the place where the Bradley monument now commemorates the tragic event.

Putney and Rogers had procured no title to the land, but their possession was confirmed by the proprietors, who in 1751 obtained a grant of the township.*

The extensive range of meadow lands, already cleared by the industry of the beaver, and the abundant natural crops of tall blue joint grass, there produced, influenced these pioneers in selecting their location, to which James Rogers gave the name of Mountalona, from a place where he had once dwelt in Ireland. He was the father of Major Robert Rogers, the celebrated leader of the ranger corps in the "Seven Years' War."

Mr. Hadley, to whose address, delivered before the Dunbarton Lyceum, in 1845, we are indebted for much information in regard to the subject upon which we now write, describes the accidental and untimely death of James Rogers as follows:

"Ebenezer Ayer, of Haverhill, Mass., a celebrated and successful hunter, came into these parts to pursue his avocation in quest of bears, deer, and other game. He had a rude camp on Walnut Hill, in Bow, near Dunbarton line. He had been hunting all day, and came to his camp in the evening; and, it not being late, was still looking out for the approach of a bear. Mr. Rogers was an intimate friend of Ayer, and was coming to pay him a visit. He drew near the camp; he was dressed entirely in black,† and the dusk of the evening deceived the eye of the eager hunter. He took the fatal aim, and shot the man. But he soon discovered his sad mistake, and with a sorrowing

* Upon a map of the town, copied in 1803 from the map drawn at Portsmouth in 1749, lot No. 8, in the fifth range, is marked, "J. T. Mason, & Putney & Rogers' eldest son," and lot No. 8, in the sixth range, is marked, "J. Rogers and Putney's eldest son: apple tree."

heart stood over the bleeding form of his friend. Rogers* did not long survive; he died before he reached home. Ayer could never after relate the sad event without shedding tears."

In 1751, the twenty-fourth year of George the Second's reign, during the provincial administration of Benning Wentworth, a settlement was regularly commenced by a grant of the township from the assigns of John Tufton Mason, to Archibald Stark, Caleb Page, Hugh Ramsay and others, which comprised a territory five miles square, including a portion of the present town of Hooksett.

At their first meeting, in Londonderry, April 8, 1751, the proprietors voted, that of the thirty individuals who should first locate themselves under their grant, each person should have three acres of land cleared on or before the last day of October succeeding; to have the same fenced in, and a dwelling-house, not less than sixteen feet square, erected, in which also their families were to be settled before the last day of May, 1752.†

In accordance with this vote, Thomas Mills, William Stinson and John Hogg located themselves in the western portion of the town. Their dwellings were situated several miles apart, and thus remained for some time without any intervening inhabitants. Although such positions are matters of common occurrence at the present day, and will continue to be for years to come, in the far extending wilderness of the West, they are no longer familiar to dwellers within the borders of New-England. Their well provided and opulent descendants can but faintly picture to themselves in imagination the stern realities met, endured, and overcome by the hardy foresters who located the now "pleasant places" in which they dwell in peace, security and happiness.

* The name of James Rogers appears in the History of Londonderry; also in a petition from the people of Suncook, May 26, 1747, to Governor Wentworth, praying for assistance against the Indians. [History of Manchester, p. 229, 230.] His sons Robert, Richard and James, were officers in the "Seven Years' War." Richard was a captain of Rangers, and died of the small-pox at Fort William Henry, in the spring of 1757. James was a captain in the same service. In the proprietors' records of Dunbarton he is mentioned as Capt. James Rogers. Several other particulars relating to the first settlement of this town, as also a different statement of the circumstances of James Rogers' death, may be found in the notice of Joseph Putney, in another portion of this work. Rogers was dressed in bear skin clothing.

† At a proprietors' meeting, held at Londonderry, April 7, 1752, Caleb Page, Jr., William Stinson, and John McCurdy, were chosen highway surveyors for Starkstown, being the first ever chosen for this town.

The situation of these pioneers could not be otherwise than drear and lonely, in a wilderness abounding with wild and ferocious animals; bears, catamounts, wolves, and wild-cats, whose dismal howls disturbed their nightly repose, and compelled them to maintain a vigilant watch over their flocks and herds. If during the night they looked abroad from their timber cabins, through the darkness and gloom around them, no friendly lights gleamed from the windows of distant dwelling-houses, to cheer their solitude, and assure them that they were not entirely alone in their forest wilderness.

Accustomed, however, from youth to hardship and laborious exertion, they were neither deterred by fear or difficulties in accomplishing their enterprise. In Mr. Hadley's address, to which reference has been already made, is a statement that Sarah, daughter of Thomas Mills, was the first child born in the settlement. The only light we can furnish upon this subject is derived from the town clerk's records, which are as follows:

"Births of the children of Thomas Mills. Sarah, b. February 11, 1755; John, b. January 7, 1756; Agnes, b. January 27, 1758; Thomas, b. January 7, 1761; Caleb, b. June 8, 1765; Elizabeth, b. September 25, 1767; Peter, b. September 25, 1769; James, b. August 24, 1771; Samuel, b. December 5, 1773. Thomas Mills, senior, died January 21, 1790, aged 70 years."

"Jeremiah Page, Esq., was married February y^e 20, 1752, to Sarah Merrill, and had the following children: First, Caleb, b. April y^e 19, 1753; second, Sarah, b. Deember ye 24, 1754; third, Achsah, b. September 25, 1759; fourth, Elizabeth, b. August ye 2, 1762; fifth, Jeremiah, b. July ye 29, 1765; sixth, John, b. September 7, 1767; seventh, Ruth, b. August 15, 1770."

Jeremiah Page, senior, Esq., died Nov. 29, 1807, aged 77 years. Upon a map of the town, drawn in 1803, is a statement that Caleb Page, the first son, and Sarah, the first daughter, of Jeremiah Page, were born at Dracut, Mass. We are, however, inclined to believe that the first child born upon the territory was one of the family of James Rogers or Joseph Putney, who settled upon it several years prior to 1746, to the eldest sons of whom lots of land were granted by the proprietors, in 1752.

Many of the original settlers of Starkstown were from Derryfield and Londonderry. Others came directly from Ireland and Scotland. Several families from the vicinity of Ipswich, Mass., took up lands near each other, in the southern border of the town, while individuals from Haverhill, Hampstead, and other towns in Massachusetts, located themselves in different parts of it. In 1770, nineteen years subsequent to the grant, the township contained 497 inhabitants. The so called Scotch-Irish emigrants, who gave the first efficient impulse to the settlement, are not to be considered as blended with the natives of Ireland.

The ancestors of those adventurers who settled Londonderry, N. H., abandoned Scotland for Ireland in 1619. There they remained for a century as a people distinct from and unmingled with those of the country to which they had emigrated. Religious persecution compelled them to depart from the land of their birth, and seek refuge and freedom in Ireland. Their expectations were, however, in every respect woefully disappointed.

There they could occupy lands only by lease, and, being strict Presbyterians, were compelled to contribute their proportion towards the support of the established church. Dissatisfied with their imposed burthens in the shape of rents and tithes, and possessing the indomitable spirit of their native Scotland, they determined to seek, in a wilderness beyond the Atlantic, an asylum for religious freedom, as also an exemption from Church and State extortions.

“ When mitred zeal in wild unholy days,
Bared his red arm, and bade the fagot blaze,
Our patriot sires the pilgrim sail unfurled,
And Freedom pointed to a rival world;
Where prowled the wolf, and where the hunter roved, Faith raised her altars to the God she loved.”

In 1719, a company of sixteen families of these people from Ireland settled the town of Londonderry, which soon afterward became a general rendezvous for others of their “kith and kin.” In his centennial discourse upon the history of Londonderry, Mr. PARKER remarks of them: “Though of Scotch origin, they are not inferior to the English. They are more frank and rough in their manners.” Their peculiarities of expression were strongly distinguishable in the conversation of the early inhabitants of Dunbarton, within the remembrance of the writer. They are, however, no longer observable in their descendants.

Notices of highways laid out are found prior to 1760. Probably before that date the first highway was opened through the western part of the town, which became a principal road, and was travelled by trains of teams from towns above, on their route to Boston.

In 1760, lot No. twelve, in the fourth range, containing one hundred acres, was granted by the proprietors to Capt. John Stark, as an encouragement to build a saw-mill, with a condition that the same should be put in operation within one year. The condition was fulfilled. A corn-mill was afterward erected; both mills rebuilt in 1810, and also in 1834. They will be renewed during the present year (1860), one hundred years from the date of the grant before mentioned.*

In 1771, the fourth lot in the sixth range was voted to be sold for fifty dollars to any person who would obligate himself to build a corn-mill on the lot for the use of the town.

* The mills still belong to the descendants of Gen. Stark. (1760)

“Voted, Said lot No. four, in the sixth range of lots in said town, to Benjamin Hadley, for fifty dollars, to be paid before the last Tuesday in June next, on his giving obligations to build a corn-mill and keep in repair said mill, for the use of the town.”—Proprietors' Record, March 12, 1771.

The mill is supposed to have been built by Mr. Hadley, and probably passed from him to Ebenezer Woodbury; for in 1789 it was called “Woodbury's Mill.” From him it came into the possession of David Kimball, whose son, Ebenezer P. Kimball, is its present owner. It is now the only grain mill in town.

A saw-mill, erected by Capt. William Stinson, near Gorham Pond, is now owned by his grandsons, Charles and William C. Stinson. Another mill, near Long Pond, is noted on the county map as the property of the latter.

On the old map of the town, drawn in 1803, upon lot No. four, in the sixth range, another saw-mill appears to have been located previous to that time. By whom built, we know not, but it is now owned by John Page.

The meetings for transacting the proprietors' affairs, and those of the town, were generally, for nearly eighteen years, held at the house of Captain William Stark, until the first meeting-house was erected. The first public meeting in Dunbarton was held October 17, 1752, upon land settled by Daniel and John McCurdy.

Archibald Stark being the first named grantee, and one of the principal proprietors, the grant was, in compliment to him, called Starkstown, by which name it was known for fourteen years. On the 10th of August, 1765, in the fifth year of the reign of George III., it was made “a body politic and corporate, to have continuance until His Majesty's pleasure should be signified to the contrary, by the name of Dunbarton, with the powers and authorities, privileges, immunities, and franchises,” belonging to other towns in the province. Its new name was adopted as a memorial of fond recollection retained for the town and castle of Dumbarton, in Scotland, from the vicinity of which Archibald Stark and the ancestors of many of the inhabitants emigrated. Governor Wentworth, in the name of the king, signed the charter, in which Caleb Page was authorized "to call the first meeting any time within forty days after the date" of it. Thenceforth all meetings for the election of town officers were to be holden annually on the second Tuesday of March.*

The first regular town meeting held in Dunbarton after its incorporation assembled at the house of William Stark, September 3, 1765, where were chosen its first town officers. No accounts show that this town was ever represented in the provincial legislature during the rule of the royal governors. In 1775 Caleb Page was chosen a delegate to the Provincial Congress.

In its representation this town was for several years classed with Bow, and Jeremiah Page† most frequently represented both towns in the legislature. In 1793 David Story was the first representative elected by the town in a separate capacity.

During the "Seven Years' War," Robert Rogers, his brothers, Richard and James, William and Archibald Stark, Jun'r, Caleb Page, Jun'r, Nathaniel Martin, Adam Dickey, John McCurdy and others, highly distinguished themselves by their bravery in the royal service. They served in the corps of rangers which essentially contributed to the success of the British arms, and spread consternation among their French and Indian enemies.

The Revolution, which commenced ten years after the

* In 1791, agreeably to a vote of the town, Jeremiah Page, Esq., obtained from the General Court an act by which the town of Dunbarton was authorized to hold the annual town meeting on the first Tuesday of March.

† The first record upon this subject was made in 1777. The inhabitants of both towns met for the purpose of choosing a representative at the house of Mr. Henry Putney. Jeremiah Page, John Hogg, David Story of Dunbarton, and John Bryant of Bow, each, at times, represented both towns.

incorporation of the town, found several of these old soldiers and other new ones ready to take the field for their country at the first alarm. Several of them served throughout the war, and performed well their parts on the "left wing" at Bunker's Hill, at Trenton, Princeton, and Bennington, as well as on other fields of fame, during that perilous, long, doubtful and glorious contest. Their domestic affairs were deemed by them as but of secondary consequence to those which concerned the great struggle to secure the success of which they had freely volunteered.

The public meetings in these exciting times were principally occupied in devising means to provide full quotas for the Continental army; and appropriations which might, under different circumstances, have been devoted to schools and preaching, were mostly applied in payment of wages and bounties to soldiers. So many of the inhabitants were occasionally absent on public service as at times scarcely to leave of true men at home a number sufficient to keep in subjection the tories, of which this town contained its full proportion.*

The warrant calling a special town meeting, May 10, 1777, during one of the darkest periods of the war, contains an urgent appeal to the people, requesting their attendance: "As," say the selectmen, "our all seems to depend upon making a stand at this time;" thus mani-

* General Stark, in a letter to President Weare, dated Derryfield, 18th March, 1781, states: "I have received two letters from Lieut. Howe. One of them informs me that he shall be able to muster forty recruits to-morrow; and the other gave intelligence of some persons tracked from Long Island to Amherst, supposed to belong to the Dunbarton tory club. I sent Lt. Archibald Stark to examine the suspected houses; which, I suppose, was executed this morning at day-break." The estates of the refugees who actually went over to the enemy were sold for the public benefit by General Stark, as commissioner appointed by the State authorities.

In lot No. 13, in the second range, a cellar is still to be seen, as also the stump, and a sprout now producing fruit, of an old sweet apple tree, probably planted by Samuel Stinson, who lived and died there. The land is now included in the Borough Farm, where Major Caleb Stark settled. Lot No. 12, in the same range, was also confiscated. The lot, divided into four portions, is now owned by Otis Duke, the heirs of Caleb Stark, Nathan Gutterson, and Mrs. Nancy Healey.

festing the fact that spirit and zeal were not wanting in Dunbarton amid the desponding gloom which then pervaded the country: ere long to be dispelled by the star of victory destined to arise at Bennington.

An elderly inhabitant of this town informed the writer, that when a boy he witnessed the lamentations of many women and children when their nearest and dearest relatives were called for to fill the ranks of the force designed for the Vermont frontier, and also the rejoicings of the same individuals, when their volunteer friends returned home victorious, without the loss of a man.*

The civil affairs of this, as of other towns, were in an unsettled condition during the early portion of the Revolutionary war. Magistrates could no longer compel obedience in the king's name. The tax-gatherer, with his baton of office, bearing the name of the third George, could not collect the government dues, until that detested name had been erased, and the more popular letters, U. S. A., substituted. No acts, however, of violence or outrage characterized this brief interval of no law, as it has been designated.

Steadfastly adhering to the object which induced their emigration to the wilds of New-Hampshire, the Scottish Presbyterians and their descendants caused religious institutions to be regarded as a prominent feature in the formation of their early settlements.

At the second proprietors' meeting, held at Londonderry in March, 1752, a vote was passed by the grantees, "that a meeting-house should be built within five years from May next ensuing." On the 4th of October, 1753, the proprietors—

"Voted, That there be a house for public worship built, of thirty feet square, and ten feet post; also,

"Voted, That Caleb Page, Samuel Rankin and John Stark be a committee to build said meeting-house."

* For the Bennington expedition, eighteen men were required to be furnished by Dunbarton, either as volunteers or by draft. Their names, with a few exceptions, we have not been able to obtain.

In 1764 the proprietors voted to sell four reserved lots, called "free lots," being lot No. 12 in the first range, Nos. 1 and 2 in the thirteenth range, and No. 2 in the second range. In January, 1765, they also—"Voted, That William Stark, William Stinson and Jeremiah Page be a committee for building and finishing the meeting-house, as far as the money will go for which the four lots of land were sold."

The lands sold produced the sum of two thousand and five pounds, and between the years 1765 and 1767,* the house was finished. Long, however, before the above dates, and, as tradition reports, soon after the grant and settlement, a sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. McGregor, in the open air, upon the ground since inclosed as a public burial place, and which probably contains the relics of many who there heard the words of grace uttered for the first time amid the forest hills of Starkstown.

The scene and occasion could scarcely fail in producing an impression, deep and lasting, upon the minds of the settlers who had there assembled from their distantly separated abodes. Their rural sanctuary was surrounded by a forest, in which the stately pine, chestnut, and other noble trees, flourished on the soil they had for ages occupied as freeholders, undisturbed in their solitude by other sounds than those of the winds of heaven, the Indian's ear-piercing yell, or the startling tones uttered by the prowling beast of prey.

The first house erected in town for public worship was a low framed structure, without pews, or perhaps but one, with seats of rough plank, resting upon chestnut logs; a rude dais raised for the accommodation of singers, and a pulpit constructed of rough boards.

The building was not remarkably tight, and possessed no conveniences for affording artificial warmth to its occupants during a cold winter's day. These deficiencies,

* That the house was built prior to the second Tuesday of March, 1767, we infer from this entry in the record of that date:

"Voted, The pound be built as near the meeting-house as possible."

however, which would appear insufferable to many effeminate worshippers of this degenerate age, were, as was the state of the weather, objects of trivial import in the estimation of our "rough and ready" church-going ancestors, many of whom had in earlier times performed their devotions with loaded muskets beside them.

The house of the proprietors answered all intended purposes for twenty years, more or less, when it was removed to make way for the plain, unsteeped, yet respectable, unpretending edifice, designed for a temple of divine worship, as well as a town-house, which now occupies the ground where it stood.

Seventy years ago the common around it was partially covered with large forest trees, having in its vicinity but two dwelling-houses. One of these, the house of William Stark, stood upon the site of the new Congregational meeting-house, on the school lot*; the other was that of Doctor Dugall, who was permitted temporarily to settle upon the glebe, or pastor's lot. He was the town's first resident physician.

Preaching was for several years furnished by different clergymen, among whom were Mr. McGregore, Mr. Davidson of Londonderry, Mr. Cotton, and Mr. Houston of Bedford. On the 3d of August, 1773, a committee was appointed by the town, to "confer with Mr. William Fessenden in regard to a settlement as a gospel minister." He had already given satisfaction in town as a preacher, but previous to his conference with the committee he had established himself in another place. During the Revolution, propositions for the benefit of the pulpit or the school were generally voted down. The claims of the soldier were paramount to all others.

For three years, from 1780 to 1783, but twenty-four days' preaching were hired. In 1785 Mr. Bradford preached, and on the 20th of October the town voted that he should have a call to settle, and a salary of seventy pounds. His doctrinal sentiments, however, proved not entirely satisfactory. In 1786 Mr. Williams preached, and thoughts were once entertained of conferring the settlement upon him. The town record of Nov. 13, 1786, reads: "Put to vote to see if the town will treat with Mr. Williams in regard to a settlement as a gospel minister, and it was passed in the negative."

A committee was appointed, October 30, 1788, to engage Mr. Harris "for one year, or a shorter time, to preach on trial;" and on the 26th of January, 1789, a vote was passed to give him a call. He was then about twenty-seven years of age, and was ordained August 26, 1789. Dr. Emmons, an eminent scholar and divine, with whom he had studied divinity, delivered the discourse upon the occasion. Previous to this event a church, consisting of eight or ten members, had been established. Mr. Harris first appropriated the proprietors' grant for the first settled minister, and located himself on the ministerial lot.* He also, by a vote of the town, obtained the use of the parsonage lot, with an additional salary of "seventy pounds by the year; one half of which was to be paid in cash, and the other in corn and rye."

The salary was obtained by a tax assessed upon all ratable polls and estates in town, without distinction of creeds. Such was the practice of the time, supported by statute. This procedure proved a source of much difficulty, as many of the tax-payers dissented from the doctrines of the standing order. Mr. Harris, as we have been informed, was himself opposed to the system which compelled men, by legal proceedings, to contribute towards the support of the pulpit. The selectmen's books show that he contributed voluntarily five dollars towards paying the costs of those whose property had been distrained by the collectors of the minister tax.

* Lot No. 8, fourth range.

REMONSTRANCE AGAINST THE MINISTER TAX.

To the Inhabitants of the Town of Dunbarton, in the County of Hillsborough :

The undersigned, inhabitants of this town, take this method of expressing their opinion relative to assessing and distraining certain of said inhabitants for rates towards the salary of the Rev. Mr. Harris. They view all such assessments, against such as claim an exemption on account of their being of a different persuasion, or denomination in religion, from the said Harris, as clearly illegal, arbitrary, and unconstitutional ; as tending to compel such persons to advance moneys without any equivalent in return ; as violating the first and most important rights secured to the citizens of the State by the constitution ; the right of liberty of conscience ; and ultimately tending to the disturbance instead of the happiness of society.

The foregoing and other good reasons induce the subscribers openly to protest against all assessments aforesaid and the consequences thereof ; and they claim the right of putting their protest on the records of said town, that the same may be a perpetual memorial against the proceedings before mentioned.

DUNBARTON, March 29, 1796.

[Town Rec., vol. 1, p. 87.]

This system continued encountering opposition in several towns, and creating hostile feelings in most of them, throughout the State, until 1819, when the talented efforts in the Legislature and popular appeals in the public journals, of the Hon. Thomas Whipple, of Wentworth, procured the passage of an act which forever exempted the people of New-Hampshire from such taxation.

In 1807, the town resolved to sell or lease for a term of nine hundred and ninety-nine years, the parsonage land, in separate lots, so arranged as to command good prices.

The following is an account of the proceedings upon that subject, copied from the records :

LEASE OF THE PARSONAGE.

9. Voted, To raise a committee to lease or sell the parsonage land.

10. Voted, To raise a committee to lot out the parsonage land, and make a return of the same at the adjournment of this meeting.

Remonstrance of Capt. Joseph Leach, and others, in regard to the sale or lease of the Parsonage land.

“We, the subscribers, hereby object against the proceedings of the inhabitants of this town on the article of selling the Parsonage land: because, we say, that the lands which are by charter annexed to the office of the ministry, ought not to be sold, and the proceeds thereof enjoyed by the present incumbent, for thereby the succeeding minister will ever be deprived of his parsonage.

2. We object to the alteration of the former contract with the present minister, and hereby declare ourselves freed from the former and the latter contracts, if so altered; and that we never will be bound thereby.

3. We declare ourselves of the opinion that the above articles are contrary to law and right.

4. We say that this town, as a town, ought to be of no bigoted sect, persuasion, or denomination, but a political body, and by that all truly religious associations are solely voluntary.”

The interest of the fund arising from the sale of the parsonage land was applied toward the stipulated salary of the minister; the remainder was voted to be raised by a tax upon all ratable polls^b and estates. Those who opposed the sale of the land, and others of similar principles, refused to pay this tax. Their property was consequently attached, and their assessments, with cost, levied upon the same. We have heard that three individuals, Archibald Stark, 2d, Caleb Page, and Joel Wheeler, were carried to jail in consequence of their pertinacious refusal to pay the tribute.

The cattle of Asa Burnham and others, including Maj. Caleb Stark, were seized in their barnyards; and in due time put up at vendue. The latter had for several years made Mr. Harris an annual present, more than equal to his proportion of the assessment, which, although satisfactory to him was not so to the leaders of his church. They resolved upon stronger measures to compel payment as of a legal claim. His cattle were seized, and the tax levied; but he never paid one voluntarily, and we think involuntarily, afterward. A portion of the above remarks apply to periods anterior to 1807.

A process thus instituted to compel individuals to support creeds to which their consciences could not respond, which differed only in name from the tithe system of England, was unpopular, and engendered a spirit of hostility, not soon to be allayed, or the cause of it forgotten. In these matters the descendants of those who fled from their fatherland to be rid of the iron shackles of church and state policy, and seek religious toleration in New-Hampshire forests, appear to have lost sight of those principles of religious freedom which were the inducing motives for their ancestors' emigration. The doctrines of religion, the precepts of virtue, as exemplified in the sentiments and conduct of our Saviour, require not the strong arm of civil power to compel their belief or adoption.

Persons whose property had been distrained, or their persons arrested on account of their refusal to pay the minister tax, prior to 1796, brought suits against the selectmen, "for taxing them in the minister list of taxes in said town, which they say is illegal; and granting a warrant to the collector to collect the same."

In consequence, the town chose a committee "to endeavor to settle the matter with those persons who have brought actions." The town voted to refund their taxes and cost.

At an adjourned meeting, in 1797 :

"Voted to refund to Mr. Thomas Huse, for taxes and cost of prosecution, it being by cause of an action brought against the town,	£2 14s. 3d.
Mr. Huse agrees to the above vote.
Likewise voted to refund to Asa Putney, for his taxes and cost of prosecution,	2 1 5

Said Stark agrees to the above.
Likewise voted to refund to Archibald Stark, for his taxes and cost of prosecution,	2 10 9

At a meeting, February 6, 1797 :

"Voted to abate Capt. McGregor's tax, in Dr. Sawyer's minister list of taxes,	£0 9s. 7d.
Voted not to abate Caleb Page's tax.
Likewise abated John Stinson's, in ditto list,	0 9 7
Also abated Samuel Stewart's tax, in ditto list,	1 0 2

Also Benjamin Stuart's tax, in ditto list,	0 4 1
Voted for the collector not to make distraint on Caleb Page , for his minister tax for 1795, before the next annual meeting."

At an adjourned meeting, March 26, 1810 :

"Voted, To refund to Mr. Asa Burnham his minister taxes and cost of his property being taken by distress. Put to vote to refund to all others in similar circumstances with Mr. Burnham their minister taxes and costs, and passed in the negative.

"Voted, To refund to Caleb Page his minister tax, and cost of property taken by distress, to pay the same.

“Voted, To refund Caleb Page, Jr., his minister tax, and cost of property taken by distress to pay the same.

“Voted, To abate John K. Guile’s minister tax. Put to vote that the selectmen inquire of every individual, when they take the inventory, whether they are willing to be taxed to pay the minister, and to tax none but those who are willing. Passed in the negative.

“Voted, That the Rev. Walter Harris’s salary be assessed on the ratable polls and estates in said town, excepting those who are of a different denomination.”

Several persons of other denominations were exempted from the minister tax in this town, by producing certificates similar to the following, which were recorded in the town books:

“Goffstown, April 2, 1807. This may certify, to whom it may concern, that Winthrop Sargent, of Dunbarton, has joined the Baptist society of Goffstown, and does attend and support the gospel in the same.

From the time the compulsory system of taxation before mentioned was discontinued, nothing of a religious nature excited the sympathies of the town until the year 1830, when the parsonage interest was divided by law, allowing to every voter the privilege of declaring to which religious society his portion should be paid.

One party contended that it should be apportioned according to ratable polls and estates; the other maintained the position that, inasmuch as the fund originated in a donation from the lord proprietors of the township, it ought in justice to be divided according to the polls. The latter principle was sustained by a majority of the legal voters.

In 1833 another dispute occurred, in consequence of a claim advanced by the Universalist and Baptist societies to the use of the meeting-house, for public worship a certain number of Sabbath days in the year, according to their proportion of the parsonage interest, or ownership of pews.

To this proposition the Congregationalists refused their assent, claiming for their society the exclusive right to its use on all occasions, excepting when the house was required for holding public town meetings.

The claimants, on the other hand, contended that the house was under the control of the town; was erected for the exclusive use of no particular society; that it had been repaired by the town, and used as a town-house from the time of its erection.

At a town meeting called to investigate the subject, a committee of two persons (one selected from each of the two contending parties) was chosen, to consult the Hon. George Sullivan, then Attorney-General, upon the question. Of this committee, Edward Gould, Esq., was appointed on the part of the Universalists and Baptists; and John Mills, Jr., Esquire, to represent the Congregationalists. At a subsequent meeting the committee reported Mr. Sullivan's opinion, which was, in substance, that a majority of the legal voters in town could control the use of the house in religious as well as all other matters. A committee was, in consequence, appointed to apportion the number of Sabbaths in the year to be allotted to each society.

In consequence of these proceedings, the Congregational Society abandoned the old meeting-house, as a place for their worship, and erected a house on the site of Col. William Stark's former dwelling-house, which was taken down to make room for the new edifice. It therefore stands upon Lot No. Nine (the old school lot), in the third range.

When the town purchased a farm for the use of their poor, at a meeting held September 2, 1837, a vote was passed, as follows: "2. Voted, To take the surplus revenue fund, belonging to said town, to pay for a farm that said town bought for the benefit of their poor. "3. Voted, To hire so much of the public money belonging to said town as will pay for the remainder of said farm. "4. Chose Charles Stinson agent to hire so much of the said money of the said town, as will pay for the remainder of the said farm."

In consequence of this application of all the available portion of the parsonage fund, the interest of the sum thus applied was raised by a tax upon ratable polls and estates until 1858, when the assessment of a tax for that purpose was forbidden by a legal voter. Able jurists have been consulted, and their opinion concedes the fact, that the town have, although unintentionally, voted away the parsonage fund, beyond any present hope of recovery. The different religious societies are consequently deprived annually of the sum of two hundred and twenty-five dollars.

In granting townships, the Lord Proprietors usually set apart a right, called the "School Lot." Such a right was reserved in this town. At the proprietors' meeting, March 2, 1752, after voting the parsonage lot, another lot was voted, as the record states, "for the use and maintenance of a school forever." In a warrant, dated May 24, 1761, calling a meeting on the second Tuesday of June following, the second article is, "to see if the proprietors will change away the School lot, which is the ninth in the third range, for the twelfth lot in the fourth range, if Captain William Stark will purchase said twelfth lot, to lay for the use of the school in said town."

At the meeting, held in consequence of this warrant, it was—" Voted and freely consented to by the proprietors of Starkstown, that the ninth lot in the third range should be exchanged for the twelfth, in the fourth range, which twelfth lot is to lay for the use of the school forever, in the room of the ninth lot in the third range."

Long before the passage of this vote, William Stark had erected his dwelling-house upon lot No. Nine, for which he never paid, nor after this vote did he ever purchase lot

No. twelve, in the fourth range,* which was to be exchanged for it; so that in fact no exchange took place, the conditions of the vote not having on his part been fulfilled. He therefore had no title to lot No. Nine, or lot No. Twelve. After his departure to join the British army in 1776, and sudden death the same year, his family remained upon the premises, their possession of which and claim for improvements constituting their sole title. The land was, in consequence, not confiscated with his other property. His non-performance of the conditions of exchange, according to the intent and meaning of the foregoing vote, created much difficulty, and rendered the grant of the proprietors for a school of but little benefit to the inhabitants. To recover this lot, the town appointed several committees to negotiate with his widow, as will appear in another part of this work. At a meeting, August 29, 1808, the town "Voted, That the selectmen pay no attention to widow Mary McGwinn, under the present circumstances." At the adjourned meeting, March 21, 1809, the town "Voted, That the selectmen attend to Mrs. McGwinn's situation, and make provision for her, and likewise look up her property, if any she may have."

An article was inserted in the warrant of March, 1810, "to see if the town will take into consideration and devise measures to recover the school lot, now occupied by Thomas Stark and others." At the ensuing meeting they — "Voted, To accept the verbal report of the committee respecting the school lot."

At the adjourned meeting, March 26, 1810: "Voted, To choose a committee of two, to make inquiry into the condition of the original school lot, and to make a report at a future meeting. Chose David Story, Esq., and Major J. Mills, committee."

The town assisted Mrs. McGwinn, and eventually obtained possession of the school lot, which was sold or leased 999 years, to Stephen Johnson, against whom an action of ejectment was commenced in behalf of the heirs of William Stark, (or perhaps in his own behalf) by the Hon. Charles H. Atherton. His action, however, could not be sustained. An article in the warrant of 1823, "to see if the town will consider Stephen Johnson, in his late farm law-suit," was dismissed.

At the meeting, in March, 1771, the sum of thirty dollars was appropriated for a town school, which appears to be the first for that purpose upon record. The same amount was annually appropriated during the years 1772, '3, '4 and '5. In 1776 the school money was voted down, as was the case from that date until March 22, 1786, when the sum of seventy-two dollars was voted for the town school. In 1788, the town "*Voted, To raise eighty dollars for a town school; and that the selectmen divide the town into proper districts for a town school, and that no men send from one district to another." In 1789, "Voted, To raise twenty-four pounds for a town school." In 1790, "Voted, Twenty-four pounds for a town school;" and in 1791 "thirty-five pounds were voted for the use of a school."

The law of 1791, which directed a tax to be assessed, amounting to seven thousand five hundred pounds sterling, upon the several towns, in proportion to their taxable property, gave a direct impulse to the common schools throughout the State.

Prior to the passage of the act of 1805, Dunbarton had been divided into three districts, each containing a school-house. Mr. Robert Hogg, a person of education, from England, known as "Master Hogg," is the principal male teacher; and Miss Sarah Clement, the most noted female teacher, of whom the tradition of those times has informed us. The principal books furnished to these primitive schools were the Bible, Psalter, New-England Primer, and Dilworth's Spelling Book. We have now in possession two books which Captain Caleb Page directed Rev. William Fessenden to procure for the use of his grandson, Caleb

* In referring to the school lot the language of the record is "a town school," "a school," or "the school."

Stark. They are Salmon's Historical Grammar, and Fening's Dictionary. We have acquired much information from each of them. With the progress of our country's advance, circumstances have changed; and in no particular more ostensibly than in the facilities afforded for mental improvement. Public encouragement has exerted a wonderful influence over the common schools of New-Hampshire, and acted with talismanic power upon the system of education in our own as well as in other towns. It is our confident hope and trust, that the youth of this generation, and others who may hereafter appear in their places, may improve and justly appreciate the superior advantages which they enjoy over those which fell to the lot of their ancestors.

For several years after the settlement of the town commenced, the nearest grain-mill was at Concord, to which the settlers carried grists upon their backs in summer, and in winter drew them upon hand-sleds, through a path marked by spotted trees. From the trees of the forest many of these hardy pioneers, who could relish coarser preparations, with much labor, formed large mortars, in which their corn could be rendered fit for making samp and hominy—the use of which they learned from their Indian predecessors. Flax was generally cultivated, and its manufacture into cloth for common garments, as also into fine linen, afforded a familiar employment to the wives and daughters of these Scotch-Irish settlers. Potatoes were cultivated; but, not being at that period, as at present, articles of general requisition, a few bushels (three or four) were considered an abundant supply for a family.

The trees marked by the king's surveyors were impediments in the husbandman's progress. Any damage which occurred to them in clearing the land, subjected the offender to a considerable fine. These trees were reserved in all grants, for the use of the royal navy. They were marked, and by the surveyors registered in books.

Notwithstanding all these difficulties, hardships and privations, these sturdy foresters possessed many sources of enjoyment; horse races were common; huskings, wool shearings, flax breakings, apple pearings, house raisings and spinning bees were joyful scenes to the people of those days. But few of these industrial pastimes are now in fashion with their posterity; but the legacies of broad lands and liberty, bequeathed them by their untutored, but industrious, and intrepid progenitors, should induce them to venerate their memory, and honor the land of their birth.

“Breaths there the man with soul so dead
 Who never to himself hath said,
 This is my own, my native land!
 Whose heart hath ne'er within him burned
 As home, his footsteps he hath turned,
 From wandering on a foreign strand!”—SCOTT.

We insert the following from the Edinburgh Encyclopædia, presuming the occupants of “our gude towne” may be interested by a description of the time-honored castle, from which its name was derived:

DUMBARTON, TOWN AND CASTLE.

“Dumbarton is a town of Scotland, situated at the confluence of the rivers Clyde and Leven, within the parish and county of the same name. Dumbrition (the fort of Britons) was the ancient name of the castle, which has been a place of strength from the earliest times, and was long deemed impregnable. It is a bold, insulated basaltic rock, rising to a great height out of the sands on the north side of the Clyde.

“It is naturally inaccessible; but by artificial means, on the north-east side, where it is strongly fortified, access to the summit is obtained. Near the top it divides into two points, on which batteries are erected. In the hollow betwixt these, there are a battery, barracks for the garrison, and a well which affords a constant supply of water. ‘Bede says, that this fortress, was Achuth or Ancluid (a place on the Cluid, or Clyde). Boethius affirms that the Caledonians possessed it before the Britons, and that it successfully resisted the attacks of Agricola* by whom it was besieged. In the reign of Egbert, of Northumberland, (A. D. 756) it was, however, reduced by famine, and again in 1571, during the troubles of Queen Mary's reign, it was taken by escalade and surprise. Fleming, the Governor, who was in Mary's interest, vaunted that he held in his hands the fetters of Scotland, and that he could, with little assistance, easily put them on. A common soldier, however, broke these boasted chains. He proposed to scale the rock and fortifications in the night. He, with some intrepid followers, succeeded in the perilous enterprise, and placed in the hands of the Regent the only fort occupied for the Queen. It is one of the Scottish forts which are still kept in repair and garrisoned. Some parts of the rock are magnetic." * * * * "The prospect from the top of the castle is extensive and varied. Loch Lomond, the Clyde, and the Leven, an interminable range of mountains, overtopped by Ben Lomond, and the towns of Glasgow, Greenock, Port Glasgow, and Dumbarton, with the villages, gentlemen's seats, and cottages, with which the rich intervening valleys are covered, form an assemblage of objects peculiarly interesting.

"The town of Dumbarton, situated a little to the north-west of the castle, on the eastern bank of the Leven, which flows nearly round it, is a royal burgh; and was erected in 1221, by Alexander II. It sends a member to Parliament, along with the burghs of Glasgow, Renfrew, and Ruther Glen. It consists chiefly of one large street in a crescent form. The houses are generally old. The inhabitants amount to about two thousand."—Edinburgh Encyclopædia.

The eighth day of April, 1751, may be considered the birth day of this town (Dunbarton, N. H).

*Agricola, father-in-law of the historian Tacitus, commanded the Roman armies in Britain, in the reign of Domitian, and defeated the Caledonians (100,000 men) under their leader Galgacus, in a great and decisive battle, at the foot of the Grampian Hills.

Whereas sundry of the grantees of this towuship have concluded their duty, enjoyed by charter, to be performed by the last day of May last passed, and by their privilege granted, those of the grantees who were not delinquent on their part, to the entry upon and unto all such delinquents' rights, and to dispose of the same for their use, their heirs and assigns, provided such non-delinquents settle the same in such manner as such delinquent grantees ought to have done; and inasmuch as their forbearance and not claiming of the non-delinquents has suspended the disposal of such rights so long after the time of their privilege, in hopes and expectation that each owner would reap the sole benefit of his own grant, and the society not be incumbered: But many still remaining delinquent, this Propriety looks on themselves, under the necessity for their own security, to dispose of all such delinquents' rights, or otherwise to secure themselves from suffering by such delinquents:

Therefore—Voted, That all delinquents' rights in said township be disposed of to the highest bidder, whereon a seizure is already taken at this meeting; and as to those that are not, such seizure be immediately made, and likewise disposed of, taking security for each purchaser for performance in season, unless, at this meeting, some good security be given on their behalf, or by themselves, they enter into such bonds as shall be at this meeting further directed for the security of the Propriety, and give their answer for the same immediately after the passing this vote.

Voted unanimously the foregoing particulars; also voted that all such delinquents, in pursuance of the vote aforesaid, give bond to the treasurer of this society and to his successor in said trust, obligated in the sum of three hundred pounds, new tenor, conditioned that the whole duty enjoined by charter to be done by the last day of this instant May, be done on or before the last day of October next; and on failure thereof to pay all damages that shall accrue to the Propriety for the future, by means of such delinquents, and as a further condition that on failure of making a complete settlement, according to the full intent of the charter, by the first day of November next, they be subjected, as a further condition for each right, to pay, as a consideration for their delay, the sum of forty pounds, new tenor. Also: Voted the foregoing article unanously.

Also: Voted, That Thomas Follansbee, Jr.'s original right is to be sold by public vendue to the highest bidder. Accordingly the same was put up to sale, and Mr. Samuel Rankin, as highest bidder, purchased the same at one hundred and fifteen pounds, old tenor, payable to this Propriety in six months from this day; and inasmuch as the security was to be given to the treasurer of this society, who is the said Samuel Rankin, therefore: Voted, That the security for the said sum be given to the present clerk and his successor in said trust, for the use of this Propriety, payable at the time aforesaid. Voted, unanously, the foregoing articles.

May the eleventh. Met according to adjournment. Also, voted, That inasmuch as sundry of the grantees who were obliged to do the duty for the first thirty, are delinquent therein; and inasmuch as a premium was to be given to such as did comply within the term stated by the charter; therefore, voted, That so much of the money raised by the privileged rights as would, by former votes, accrue to those grantees, delinquents aforesaid, had they performed in season, be stayed in the treasurer's hands, and at present not paid to them ; and that so much a part thereof as will pay the expenses at Mr. Samuel Rankin's, of this Propriety in public, exclusive of what is paid by Mr. Rankin for those yet remaining unpaid, and to the conclusion of this meeting, be granted and paid out of the same ; and that of the remainder, all such delinquents who shall fulfill their duty of the first thirty, that by charter was to be done by the last day of May, current, old style, by that time, although a part thereof to be done the last year was not then performed, shall have the benefit and receive of the treasurer of this Propriety such a part of such privilege purchase, after such charges are first subducted, and paying their part of the charge of taking possession, according to vote thereon : that on a certificate from William Stinson and Thomas Mills, shewing that such duty is effectually performed, according to the tenor of their bonds, at their cost, then said treasurer will deliver said bonds for fulfilling duty to them, and pay such part of their privilege purchase money, as aforesaid, after the subductions aforesaid, on demand :

And that all such of the said thirty as do not, by the last of May current, according to old style, perform said obligation, that part of the money by them to have been received, if terms had been seasonably complied with, shall remain in the treasurer's hands for the further order of this Propriety.

Also, voted, That thirty pounds, old tenor, be granted to Alexander McMurphy, for his services as proprietors' clerk, and in full for his entering and recording the charter and votes under y^e former and present charter of this Propriety, drawn to this day in y^e proprietors' book, and for all other his charges or certificates in his office.

Also, Voted, That the several delinquents of the first thirty settlers, in case they give bond, according to the tenor of the bond given by Mr. Hugh Ramsay, for like deficiency, to the treasurer of this Propriety, Mr. Samuel Rankin, subjected to duty and payment at or before Wednesday next, and on failure thereof that immediately Mr. Caleb Page be directed, at the expense of this Propriety, to enter and take possession of all such delinquents' rights for the benefit of this Propriety; and that he make return, at the next adjournment of this meeting, of his proceedings; and that the rights of all such delinquents who do not give their bonds as aforesaid, be sold according to the power in the charter to the non-delinquent grantees given.

Also, Voted, That Mr. Caleb Page be continued to take possession of all the delinquents' rights that are returned by Mr. Samuel Rankin, who have not given their bonds for performance of their duty, according to the foregoing votes relating to this affair, to Mr. Caleb Page, with the number of the lot or lots so returned.

The above is copied from the original in the hand writing of Robert Hogg, familiarly known as "Master Hogg," whom tradition reports to have been the first teacher who opened a public or private school in Dunbarton. The hand-writing is very plain and distinct, better than that of most of the clerks who recorded the transactions of those days in the town books.

MISCELLANEOUS MATTERS RELATING TO TOWN AFFAIRS.

WARNING OUT.

To prevent persons, having no legal residence and no ostensible property, from becoming town charges upon the places of their temporary abode, the law required that they should be warned to leave the town by a notice to that effect, served upon them by the constables; who, in several instances, were employed to convey them out of town. The records furnish many instances similar to the following, dated March 14, 1786:

Voted, To allow Israel Clifford's account brought in for carrying William Hogg to Weare, and allowed him	£0 12s. 0d.
For warning out Mrs. Dawson,	0 2 0
For warning out George Hogg,	0 3 0
For carrying George Hogg and family to Weare,	0 9 0

Voted, Not to allow David Story's account against Joshua Folsome, but to support said Story in bringing an action against said Folsome, for bringing said Hogg's family unlawfully into town.

Voted, To allow Ephraim Kinsman £0 19 s. 9 d. for sundry articles, and warning sundry persons out of town, and returning warrants.

William Beard, as constable, warned out Alexander Nichols and others.

DR. DUGALL'S PETITION.

To the gentlemen of estates, freeholders, and other inhabitants of Dunbarton, in the State of New-Hampshire, and at the March meeting on the second Tuesday of said month, in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and eighty-five, the petition of William Dugall, of Dunbarton, in the said State, doctor, humbly requesteth of said gentlemen their liberty and votes, in town meeting assembled, for him to clear a piece of land on the Glebe, or Parson's lot, and to build a house near the road, and to have the use of said land, until they have a minister settled on it, or the town see cause to take it away; and that your petitioner shall have liberty to sell the same or remove it off the premises; as said petitioner, or his heirs, and the town or minister, think best or agree upon the same.

Wherefore your petitioner humbly hopes you will be graciously pleased to take under consideration to grant your petitioner the above request, and your petitioner shall in duty be ever bound to pray.

WILLIAM DUGALL.

The above petition was granted, and entered in vol. 1, page 217.

TYTHINGMEN.

Tythingmen were formerly chosen in the New-England colonies at every annual meeting. Their principal duties were to preserve order, and prevent persons traveling on the highway, from sunrise to sunset, on the Sabbath.

Party excitement in 1814 induced the enactment of special statutes upon the subject, and a rigorous enforcement of their provisions. The officers, in their zeal to discharge their supposed duties, frequently exceeded their authority, and rendered themselves liable for damage and cost. Many humorous instances of their misadventures might be cited, did our limits permit. A statute regulating their proceedings was, in 1814, enacted by the Legislature of New-Hampshire, which remained in force until 1834-5, when it was repealed, having continued for a number of years a dead letter in the statute book.

In this town, tythingmen were chosen from early times, until March, 1818, in which year none were appointed. In 1819* John Wilson, Thomas Mills and Perley P. Ray were elected, but not sworn. These gentlemen were the last tythingmen in this town. John Holmes was the first, being the only one chosen at the first town meeting held under the charter, September 3, 1765.

We have never learned that any difficulty occurred in this place during the existence of, or in consequence of the "Sunday law." From this we infer that the inhabitants of those days were well disposed, orderly, go-to-meeting sort of people, who preferred listening to a fervent discourse from Mr. Harris to traveling the roads; or, that the custodians of the Sabbath were indulgent, mind-their-own-business sort of officers. Probably both inferences are correct.

MILITIA TRAININGS.

Militia trainings were once joyous occasions, as well to those on duty as to the crowd of spectators. Men, boys and girls assembled to witness the parade and listen to the inspiring music of the fife and drum.

* In 1812 the tythingmen were John Chase and Thomas Hammond, Jr. In 1813, none were chosen. After the passage of the act of 1814, in March, 1815, nine were chosen; in 1816, eight; and in 1817, ten.

But few of the privates wore similar dresses, but the officers were in uniform, and armed with swords or spon-toons. The latter were long lances, having a steel pike at one end, just below which was a hatchet, resembling an Indian tomahawk.

The first of these parades we ever witnessed in this town was in the fall of 1812. The officers of the company (consisting of about 90 men), were Capt. David Alexander, Lieutenant Thomas Stinson, Ensign John Stinson, and Orderly Serjeant Thomas Hammond. The officers, after a short drill and a few marches and countermarches, treated liberally their men, and the spectators, with as much New-England "fire-water" as they desired, according to the custom of the times.

At the close of the drill a hollow square was formed, into which advanced the veteran Major John Mills, then first selectman, who delivered to each man a quarter of a pound of powder; and vendued their dinner, for the coming muster-day, to the lowest bidder; the materials for which were to be, as declared in his own words, "good fresh beef, well baked or roasted; good wheat bread, well baked; good old cider, or new cider, well worked," &c.

We doubt the State's policy in dispensing with the annual parades and musters. To restore the organization, broken down by act of the Legislature, would now prove a difficult undertaking, whatever may be the emergency. If "coming events cast their shadow before," we know not how soon such a necessity may transpire; or the now apparently peaceful repose of the country be broken by the martial tones of "trumpet and drum," and the tumult, horrors and desolation of war.

RAISINGS, AND TRIALS OF STRENGTH AND SKILL.

At the raising or moving of buildings, and other occasions when people assembled in numbers to assist voluntarily in performing labors which required the united strength of many, the good cheer at such times plentifully supplied, usually led to trials of strength and skill in gymnastic exercises.

Lifting heavy weights, pitching quoits, throwing the bar, or a heavy piece of iron, pulling sticks, and wrestling, were generally the closing scenes of these friendly gatherings. Even in our own time we have witnessed and taken part in such pastimes. At town meetings, also, such encounters were customary.

Wrestling matches were frequently commenced by boys; each, who was thrown, bringing in a champion, and thus proceeding onward, the wrestlers increasing in size and age at each trial, until men were called into the arena where boys first contended. The person who threw his man in the last encounter was declared by all persons to have "carried the ring."

All men distinguished in these athletic exercises—such men as lived in the days of Robert Rogers—(himself never vanquished in such trials) were known to each other by reputation, although resident in distant towns. It was customary for such notable individuals to travel many miles to "try a fall at wrestling" with other champions, although entire strangers.

An anecdote in the History of Manchester exemplifies this species of wrestling errantry, although the result was perhaps not satisfactory to the knight who came so far to obtain a fall.

A person called at the house of John McNiel, of Londonderry, in consequence of having heard of his strength and prowess. McNiel was absent, which circumstance the stranger regretted (as he informed his wife, Christian, who inquired his business), since he had traveled many miles for no other purpose than to "throw him."

"And troth mon," said Christian McNiel, "Johnny is gone, but I'm not the woman to see ye disappointed: an' I think if ye'll try, mon, I'll throw ye meself." The stranger, not liking to be bantered by a woman, accepted the challenge; and, sure enough, Christian tripped his heels and threw him upon the ground. The stranger, upon getting up, thought he would not wait for "Johnny;" but left, without deigning to leave his name.

BOUNDS OF THE COMMON.

DUNBARTON, 7th October, 1803. Agreeably to a vote of the town, last March meeting, we, the subscribers, have this day measured the land about the meeting-house, called the "Meeting-house Common," and set bounds to the same, which are as follows: viz., Began at the north-west corner of said common, which is the corner of a lot; thence running south four degrees east, on the line, sixty rods, to a stake and stones; thence north eighty-seven degrees east, twenty rods and six tenths, to a stake and stones; thence north four degrees west, sixty rods, to the lot line, to a stake and stones; thence westerly to the first bound.

EXTRACT FROM THE GEOLOGICAL SURVEY OF NEW-HAMPSHIRE,
BY DR. CHARLES T. JACKSON.

In Dunbarton, a silver mine was talked of, and on searching for it we discovered that an ore of arsenic had been mistaken for silver. The locality is situated near the house and on the estate of Mr. Stephen Wheeler, who kindly assisted in its exploration. The arsenic ore is included, as a bed, between a strata of mica slate, resting directly in granite. It is from six to eight inches in thickness, and is very heavy, and rich in arsenic. The bed with the strata is to the south 80°, east 20°, and runs north and south. Large quantities of loose pieces of the ore may be easily obtained on the surface and in the soil.

This mine is a quarter of a mile north-west from Mr. Stephen Wheeler's house, on his estate, adjoining Dea. Joel Wheeler's. The field where it occurs was, when we were there, cultivated for rye, but is very rough, broken and rocky.

Associated with the arsenical pyrites, the green arseniate of iron is found, forming investing layers on the ore, and scorodite, or the yellow arseniate of iron, occurs in concretionary masses and thin crusts between the joints and cavities.

A little argentiferous galena was also found in disseminated branches and crystals. Radiated black tourmaline exists in the mica slate, and quartz crystals are found in the vein and in the soil. Kaolin, or clay, from decomposed granite, fills up many spaces between the rocks. From the frequent association of arsenical pyrites with tin ore, we were led to expect its occurrence at this place, and worked diligently in search for it, until driven from the field by a heavy and long continued thunder-storm with violent rain. It may be worth while to search the rocks in this vicinity with care, to ascertain if oxide of tin occurs there.

LEASE OF TOWN LANDS.

In March, 1803, Jeremiah Page, David Story and Ebenezer Chase were appointed a committee to lease all the school land for nine hundred and ninety-nine years. For the consideration of the sum of five hundred and seventy-seven dollars and twenty cents, they leased to John Raymond, he being the highest bidder, at a public vendue, the "school lot of land in Dunbarton, being the north side of the lot No. 8, in the first range in said Dunbarton, the one half of said lot in quantity, containing fifty-five acres, more or less." [This is now, 1860, partly owned by Caleb Stark.]

In 1804, David Story, Major C. Stark and John Mills were appointed a committee to lease, for nine hundred and ninety-nine years, a portion of the Meeting-house Common, in the same manner, at vendue. It is thus described: "Being part of the six acres reserved out of the parsonage land by the town, lying north of the grave-yard, containing about one acre, more or less, and bounded as follows: Beginning at a stake and stones the east side of the road, thence running easterly by land of Jeremiah Stinson, about sixteen rods, to stake and stones; thence southerly by the parsonage land, about nine rods, to stake and stones; thence westerly by common land, and the grave-yard, about sixteen rods, to stake and stones; thence northerly to bound first mentioned."

Nathan Greeley, trader, and Jeremiah Stinson, Esq., were the highest bidders, and to them it was struck off, at two hundred and one dollars.

In 1805 another portion of the town land was similarly disposed of to Nathaniel and James B. Colby, of Hopkinton, for two hundred dollars. Another portion of town land was, in 1806, leased in the same manner to Jeremiah and John Stinson, for two hundred dollars. Another portion was, in 1808, leased as aforesaid, to Thomas and Jeremiah Page Raymond, for five hundred and seventy-seven dollars and seventy-seven cents. On each lease ten dollars in cash was paid down, and a bond, drawing interest annually, given for the balance.

GRAVE-YARD WALL.

DUNBARTON, September 29, 1800. Conditions of sale for fencing the grave-yard, by the meeting-house in said town, to be vendued to the lowest bidder, according to the proprietors' vote, September 8, 1800.

1. The lowest bidder or bidders to be undertaker (or undertakers).

2. The bids to be by the rod, and nothing short of ten cents will be considered a bid.

3. The same to be in lots, in the following manner: viz., Lot first, from the north-west corner of the gate, to the south-west corner, thence turning the course to the south-east corner. The before mentioned lots are considered faced wall.

Lot third to be from the south-east corner to the north-east corner, from thence west, to the bound first mentioned. This is considered as good common stone wall.

4. The gate to be vended in the same manner as the building of the wall.

5. The faced wall to be equally as well faced as that of the Rev. Walter Harris,—the south side of his bars that lead into his field, the south end of his wall, near his yard. The common wall to be equally as good as that of Capt. William Stinson, east of his house, on the north side of the road, from his house to his pasture bars, between his house and the head of the lane east of his house.

6. The undertakers to give bonds to the committee, chosen by the proprietors for that purpose, for the fulfillment, and the committee to give their obligation for payment to the undertakers.

GRAVE-YARD.

In 1766 the town "Voted, That the selectmen build a pound, and fence the grave-yard;" and in 1767, "Voted, That the pound be built as near the meeting-house as possible;" also "Voted, That any person or persons who shall not come, or send a hand to help build said pound, and fence the grave-yard, upon the third Tuesday of June next, shall pay three shillings, lawful money, to the selectmen, to be collected by the constable."

A pound was consequently erected near the meeting-house, constructed of round and split logs, and the graveyard fence in a similar manner.

Tradition reports that several years previous to the passage of the foregoing votes, the first sermon ever heard in this, then forest township, was delivered by the Rev. Mr. McGregore, in the open air, upon the ground now inclosed as the central public cemetery. Several of the audience upon that highly interesting occasion probably lie, "each in his narrow cell for ever laid," within its surrounding walls.

During a visit to this consecrated inclosure, a few days since, we observed with pleasure indications of recent improvement in the many elegant monuments reared to the memory of the dead, surrounded with shrubs and flowers, exhibiting the piety and taste of surviving relatives.

The disposition to adorn, with the productions of nature and art, the hallowed ground where mortals find their last repose, we are happy to say is increasing in the community. Its progress and results deserve encouragement and commendation. "Foul fall the hand" that would mutilate a memorial erected by friends to designate the place where objects of their affection are laid at rest:
To—

Rest till the morn when trumpet sound
Shall rouse death's sleepers from their bed;
When earth and ocean, circling round,
Yield up their spoils of quick and dead;
When friends shall meet, from woes at rest,
In Heaven's pure conclave of the blest.

The oldest stone in the yard, with an inscription, is that of Samuel Foster Cunningham, son of George Cunningham, who died in 1794, aged nine years. The first person buried in the yard was Samuel Stinson. His grave is near the hearse-house. No stone, bearing any inscription, marks the spot. He was one of the first settlers. We copied from stones in this cemetery the following memorials :

“Mrs. Hannah Burnham, died March 1, 1805 ; relict of the late Lieut. Nathan Burnham, of Ipswich, Massachusetts, who fell at the defeat of the British army at Ticonderoga, A. D. 1758.”

Capt. William Stinson.

“Stranger, like you, I once enjoyed my health,
Relations pleasant, and sufficient wealth,
Till Eden’s fiery law alarmed my soul,
The Saviour spoke—I bowed to his control.
Riches more enchanting, brighter joys I found,
Than earth afford or Eden blooming round.

On the stone of Mr. William Beard are engraved, after the date and age, the appropriate words : “A soldier of the Revolution.”

Caleb Mills.

“My children dear, as you draw near,
Your father’s grave to see,
Not long ago I was with you,
And soon you’ll be with me.”

Mrs. Tamar Mills.

“Our labors done, securely laid
In this our last retreat,
Unheeded o’er our silent dust,
The storms of life shall beat.”

Benjamin Twiss.

“Time was, I stood where thou dost now,
And viewed the dead, as thou dost me ;
Ere long thou ’lt lie as low as I,
And others stand and look on thee.”

The town contains two other public cemeteries ; one at Page’s Corner, and one on its eastern border, near Bow line. The family of the late Major Caleb Stark have a private burial place upon their estate, on the road leading from Concord to Weare.

PHYSICIANS. Doctor John Cochran was assigned, in 1752, lots numbered two, three and four, in the eighth range. In regard to his residence and practice as a physician we are not informed. Dr. Dugall was permitted, as a temporary residence, to erect a house upon the minister's lot. He practiced before and after that date.

Dr. Symmes Sawyer was married May 31, 1792, to Ruth, daughter of Hon. Jeremiah Page, and practiced before and after that year. Dr. James Clement, Dr. Shaw and Dr. David Mighill, were resident physicians. The latter married, September 7, 1814, Betsey Mills, daughter of Major John Mills.

Dr. Isaac Stearns, from Lovewell, Maine, settled here in 1819. He married Eunice P., daughter of Mr. Benjamin Marshall, and for his second wife Mrs. Lund, daughter of Mr. Jeremiah Page. He died August 31, 1850, aged 57. He was an amiable person, much respected, and was post-master at the time of his death.

After his departure, Dr. Merrill settled here. He remained a year, more or less. We have now no resident physicians, unless we consider, as such, our good friend, True Morse, who prepares many remedies for the benefit of invalids, and Mr. Jonathan Colby, who possesses the power of healing which a "seventh son" can exercise.

MAGISTRATES. Justices of the Quorum: Caleb Stark, Henry L. Burnham. Justices: Nathan Gutterson, Daniel H. Parker, Nathaniel H. Wheeler, John Burnham, Jonathan Ireland, John Stinson, Charles Holmes, John C. Ray, Charles G. B. Ryder, William B. Burnham, Josiah Richardson, Henry Putney, Leonard Rowell.

RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATIONS. These are four: viz., the Congregationalist, Universalist, Methodist and Baptist societies. The Baptists have two meeting-houses. The Universalists hold their meetings in the town-house. The Methodists use one of the Baptist houses. The Congregationalists have a meeting-house and vestry building. Of the above named societies the latter only support a permanent clergyman.

REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIERS.

Although this town furnished, upon all occasions, its full quota of soldiers for the Continental army, and militia volunteers, we find in the town-clerks' records but few of their names.

John Mills, William Beard, ——— Holmes, Caleb Stark and John McPherson were at Bunker's Hill, and probably in other actions of the war.

On the 22d of July, 1777, eighteen men were required for the Bennington expedition. Thomas Mills, a. son of John McCurdy, Alexander Hogg and Thomas Hoyt volunteered on that occasion.

In 1781 eight men were called for, as recruits for the Continental regiments. To fill up their quota at that time the town hired, among others, John Dorman, Amos Barnes, John Morgan, Moses Heath and Nicholas Dodge. The contracts of Heath and Dodge are inserted in this work among the transactions of 1780 and 1781.

The soldiers of 1812 from this town were Joseph Collins, of the 4th regiment U. S. infantry. He was at Chattaugee, and at the attack of LaCóle or Stone Mills, in 1814. He died a few years ago.

Thomas Ayer, of the 11th infantry, was in the actions of Chippewa and Niagara. He is now the oldest person in town, having entered his 91st year in May, 1860.

Charles Hart was a soldier in 1813.

Benjamin Whipple and Ephraim S. Clement volunteered in the Massachusetts regiment for the Mexican war. The latter died at Vera Cruz, and the former soon after his return home.

ECCLESIASTICAL STATISTICS.

For the following we are indebted to the Rev. John M. Putnam :

Congregational Church in Dunbarton.

This church was organized June 18, 1789, consisting of ten members. This was about forty years after the first permanent settlement was made, by white inhabitants, and twenty-four years after the town was incorporated under the name of Dunbarton.

In 1769, about twenty years before the organization of the church, the town had erected a rude structure which they denominated a meeting-house, and which was used for purposes of public worship, though it had scarcely any resemblance to a church edifice of the present day. It stood where the old meeting-house, belonging to the town, now stands. All around was an uncultivated, wild forest, casting the shadows of its foliage upon the court of the Lord's house.

In 1789, the town voted, on certain specified conditions, to build a new meeting-house, which vote was carried into effect. In August (26th) following, the Rev. WALTER HARRIS was ordained over the church as pastor.

In 1792, the third year of the ministry of the new pastor, there was a religious awakening of a very marked character. The result was a great enlargement of the church, bringing into it eighty new members.

In 1816 another season of refreshing from the Divine presence was experienced, which resulted in forty accessions to the church in the course of that and the ensuing year.

The year 1826 is also memorable for the manifestations of the grace of God to this church. Eighty new members were added, in connection with this extensive awakening. About four years after this, Dr. Harris closed his long and highly useful labors as pastor of this church. But his influence still lives ; beautiful as a thread of gold, and, with the strength of iron, it is interwoven with the character of this people.

The inside of said house to be finished in the same order, agreeably to the plan by which the pews were sold. Said meeting-house to be sealed pew-high, and plastered: the rest, both above and below, and under the beams and galleries, according to rule. The outside of said house to be painted with a good stone color, and every pew well made, and the number of each pew to be numbered with handsome paint, agreeable to rule.

Now the true intent and meaning of the above Obligation is such, that if the above said Archibald Stinson and William Tenney, or either of them, their heirs or assigns, shall build and finish said meeting-house, and deliver said house to the said committee, with a good bill of sale of every pew, to the purchasers of said pew, at or before the first day of November, one thousand seven hundred and ninety, to the acceptance of said committee, then this bond, or obligation, to be null and void; otherwise, if not, said bond to remain in full force and virtue.

PROTEST OF MAJOR JOHN STINSON TO THE MEETING OF 1801.

STATE OF NEW-HAMPSHIRE.—HILLSBOROUGH SS.

To DAVID STORY, Moderator of an Annual Meeting held at Dunbarton on the third day of March, Anno Domini eighteen hundred and one:

GREETING:

We, the subscribers, complain and say that said meeting is illegal, as a number of minors and others came forward and cast their votes for a representative for said town, who were not legal voters. And therefore we humbly pray that said meeting may be reconsidered, and that we may [have] the liberty of a new choice of officers;

otherwise we object to said meeting, and the proceedings thereof.

JOHN STINSON.

The foregoing delivered to me, and requested to be put on record.

DANIEL JAMESON, Town-Clerk.

We have examined the proceedings of the meeting above named, but find nothing explanatory in regard to the above protest.

ACCIDENTAL DEATHS.

The wife of John Mills was frozen to death, while proceeding from Capt. Oliver Bailey's house, over the hill, east of the place where Oliver Bailey, Jr., once dwelt. This happened many years ago.

Mrs. Archelaus Colby wandered from home while insane, and died in the woods. She was missing several months. Her bones were found by a hunter, in Goffstown. Her husband was drowned in Kimball's pond, while crossing on the ice.

Mrs. Eleazer Butters was killed by being thrown from a horse, between Goffstown and Dunbarton.

James Rogers was shot by a hunter, having, on account of his bear-skin dress, been mistaken for a bear.

Dr. Jeremiah P. Tenney, Leonard Parker, Stephen Stark, Ebenezer Butler, (at Stark's mill-pond, June, 1821,) Parmlee Holmes, a son of Paltiah Brown, Esq., drowned.

Jeremiah Stinson, in 1809, died of injuries received by falling upon a pitch-fork; Capt. Joseph Leach, being crushed by a cart-wheel; Col. Warren Story, by the kick of a horse; Mrs. John Page, by being thrown from a wagon. Ebenezer Bailey died of injuries received on the Lawrence Railroad; old Mr. Andros was injured by a cross cow, and died. Mr. Benjamin Perley, senior, was burned in his house. Dr. James Stark, son of the late Dr. S., of Hopkinton, was, in 1847-8, found dead in Dunbarton woods. He came to hunt, with only his dog for a companion. His horse he had tied by the roadside, where it remained all night and part of the next day. He was not known by those who found him. His horse, however, took a direction, when loosed and a driver was in the seat, towards home. His death was probably caused by the accidental discharge of his own gun. His faithful dog was found watching his remains. He went to the road occasionally, barked, and returned to the woods. He was found by two persons hunting for squirrels. It was an afflicting accident, and his untimely fate was deeply lamented. The wife of Captain Oliver Bailey died in consequence of a fall down the cellar stairs. Mr. Clark Bailey, who had been for several years in a state of mental despondency, hanged himself. The wife of Darius M. Richards committed suicide by hanging herself in a barn, now the property of Capt. B. Whipple.

DISAPPEARANCE OF M'CARTHY.

During the severe winter of 1832-3, an Irishman, and temporary resident of this place, disappeared in a singular manner. He left Concord, where he worked as a journeyman tailor, for Dunbarton, where his family dwelt with his father-in-law, Henry Hemphill. He started from Concord on foot, during a stormy afternoon, and was not again seen by any person, unless, perhaps, by his own family. In the course of the winter his children related at school, in the Page Corner district, that their father came home intoxicated, (not an uncommon occurrence) that a quarrel commenced, during which Hemphill stabbed him several times with a knife, and the blood ran out upon the floor, where he fell; that their grandfather and mother then dragged him down cellar, and they saw him no more. A portion of the old Page house, then occupied by the parties, had some time previously been removed, leaving the cellar uncovered. In the course of the Spring of 1833 Hemphill filled the cellar with stones, which he covered with earth, where he planted cucumbers. During the winter of 1833-34 a rumor of the circumstances appeared in a Boston paper before many persons in the town knew that such a person as McCarthy existed. This notice caused much conversation upon the subject, and induced a search of the premises, in which probably more than one hundred and fifty persons assisted. The house and cellar were searched; a well, partly filled with stones, cleared out, and the cellar which Hemphill had filled was also cleared of its contents. But no vestige of human remains or clothing appeared. The search was continued for a whole day, about the first of February, 1834, during which persons questioned the children. One little girl repeated the story told at school, and shew the place on the floor where, she said, the blood had been, and that it was washed away after the affair was over. This was while Hemphill was out of the room. When he returned she was desired to tell the story again, and show the place. She would not speak, but went to the place she had previously pointed out, and danced upon it.

It was well known that the parties quarrelled often, and people had been called in to separate them several times when engaged in these fights. But being persons of not much consequence in the vicinity, they were not troubled greatly by the notice of the neighborhood. Hemphill had been in the Vermont State prison for stealing a horse or something else. Nothing, however, turned up during the search, to sustain the suspicions of foul play.

The man's disappearance, (he has not since been seen or heard of) the tales of the children, the character of the parties, the fact that the old man took from his pocket a quantity of silver change, to divert the little girl from giving information, when told in his presence to relate the story, and shew the place* on the floor where the blood flowed. These circumstances are the only explanation of the mystery we possess.

* When the little girl stood upon the place she had designated, Hemphill, with change in his hand, said, "See here, dear; you know what I am going to give you, if you will be good."

March 17, 1854. Mr. ELIJAH LYMAN HARRIS was accidentally drowned in the Ohio river, at Maysville, Kentucky. The particulars are stated in another portion of this book. The following extract from his journal may be interesting to his friends in this vicinity. The facts he has stated are doubtless correct, and, with corroborative testimony from others present at the trial of the pirates, in Savannah, in 1819, exempt his conduct from censure during his compulsory and unfortunate intercourse with them in their brief and lawless cruise.

EXTRACT FROM A JOURNAL KEPT BY MR. E. L. HARRIS.

“In the latter part of December, 1815, (then 17 years of age,) I went to live with William Green, then a merchant of Orford, N. H. He sold out his stock, and in March following I returned to Dunbarton. In June, 1816, Mr. Green having commenced business at Sanbornton, I returned to his employment. The season was remarkably cold with a frost in all the summer months, in consequence of which corn and other crops came near a total failure. In March, 1817, I returned to Dunbarton, and in April went to live with Dea. Farwell, at Hopkinton. Returned home in August. Went to Londonderry in September, and studied navigation with Capt. Choate. Returned in October. Same month went to Salem, Mass., where I resided with cousin Nathaniel Gerry.

“Early in November I shipped on board ship Andrew Jackson, Edward Richardson master, bound for New-Orleans. Off the Bahama islands we were boarded by pirates from an armed schooner, who took from the vessel provisions, a coil of rigging and a spy-glass. Although we had several passengers, all of whom had considerable money, none of them were robbed, no private property was disturbed, and no person suffered violence.

“The Andrew Jackson was an English built vessel, and a dull sailer; in consequence our passage occupied sixty-three days, arriving at New-Orleans about January 1, 1818. Dissatisfied with the ship I left her near the last of February, and went on board the schooner Two Brothers, George Rapphel master, bound for Boston.

“ We arrived at Edgartown, Martha’s Vineyard, after a rough, stormy passage of twenty-seven days from the Balize. In April left the Vineyard for Boston, but when off the cape a thick N. E. snow-storm obliged us to put back. We got into the breakers, and brought the vessel to anchor. At 4 P. M. lost the anchor. Brought to with the other anchor. Next day the weather became clear, and we got into Holmes’ Hole, Martha’s Vineyard, where, after waiting a few days, we obtained a breeze, and arrived at Boston, after a lengthy passage of forty-five days.

“ In April I shipped in the coasting trade, on board schooner — , Trefethen master, and sailed for Lubec, to which port made two trips. On the first took a load of plaster to Richmond, and on the second to Baltimore, where I left the vessel, and about the last of August went to the seamen’s hospital, where, being sick, I resided some time. In November I left the hospital and shipped on board schooner Harriet, Kerlie master, for Havana, and made a very good passage of eight days from Baltimore. I left the Harriet at Havana, and shipped to go to Key West, to cut wood. Sailed in schooner Francisco, Ives master. Key West is about one hundred miles from Havana, but in consequence of a mistake of the pilot we were twenty-five days in making the passage. Having arrived there, those who were shipped for the island were put on shore, and the vessel sailed for Havana. Mr. Obed Wright and a Mr. Manson had charge of those who were attached to the island. Found at the island a Mr. Palmer, Mr. Fitz, and a man they had hired. These men were employed in getting sponges and catching turtle. Our crew, with the exception of Wright, Manson and myself, were foreigners, not used to the business for which they were employed, and became so dissatisfied that all of them, with the exception of Johnson, a Swede, took one of the boats and put to sea. They arrived at Havana, and returned the boat to the vessel. Some three weeks after our vessel left she returned with stores and two more men for the island—Owens, and Jeffreys, a free colored man ; a few days after which the schooner, taking a load of wood, sailed again for Havana.

“ A short time after the Francisco sailed, two small vessels, with lateen sails, under Venezuelian colors, arrived. They were manned by twenty or twenty-five men each, were well armed with muskets, cutlasses and pistols. The vessels I think carried some small pieces of ordnance. They were not backward in letting us know who they were. They appeared well satisfied with their business, and confessed without reluctance that they were pirates.

“ A few days after this the pirates returned, but remained only a few minutes, by reason of a vessel appearing in the offing, to which they gave chase. A few days after this the sloop Lawrence, Atwick master, arrived from Charleston. Atwick was a native of Maine. Chase, his mate, belonged to Dover, N. H. In an indirect way the Lawrence, in connection with Atwick's conduct, became instrumental in my subsequent embarrassments with the pirates.

“ A short time after this Johnson, the Swede, was murdered by Wright. We were at this time employed in drawing coal from the coal-pit, and for a day or two had not been constantly employed. In consequence of this indulgence Johnson had become hard to govern, from being in a state of intoxication. Johnson was ordered to go to work, which he refused to do. Wright having become very angry, ordered him again to work, and he again refused. Wright then seized a stick, one inch and a half in diameter, with which he struck Johnson several times over the head, and fractured his skull. This happened in the afternoon, and Johnson did not complain much of his injuries, but throughout the next day appeared to be exercised with great pain in the head. He expired in the night, some thirty-six hours after having been thus unmercifully beaten by Wright. On the night the unfortunate Johnson died, Wright lodged on board the Lawrence. After the latter had returned to the shore I reported to him the death of the former. Agreeably to Wright's order I went for Jeffreys, who, with myself, prepared a grave, and we in presence of Wright saw Johnson's remains committed to their final resting-place.

“Shortly after these events the Francisco arrived, took in a load of wood and coal, and sailed again for Havana, with Wright as a passenger. When Ives left at this time he told Jeffreys and myself that he would return for us in six weeks, and take us off the island. I have never seen or heard from Wright since he left us.

“Two or three weeks after the Francisco sailed, the buccaneers returned to our harbor, having, beside their two schooners, a Spanish sloop, with a number of slaves on board. The pirates stated that since they last left here they had visited Cuba, and robbed several plantations there, taking from them slaves and specie. A few hours after the arrival of the pirates they went on board the Lawrence, and treated Atwick very cruelly, thinking thereby to obtain considerable money from the vessel, as Furlong, one of Atwick's crew, had reported a large amount to be on board. The result of the search proved, to the satisfaction of the pirates, that Furlong made a malicious report against Atwick, and that there was not a dollar in money on board the Lawrence. After remaining in the harbor two days the pirates left, and I have not seen or heard of them since.

“A few days after these transactions, as Jeffreys and myself were short of provisions, and hearing that the Francisco would not return for some time to come, I shipped on board the Lawrence, intending to go in a few days on a “wrecking voyage.” In a few days afterward we sailed for Florida Reef, and when half way between Key

In 1830, July 8, the second pastor of this church, the Rev. John M. Putnam, (the present pastor) was installed by the same council that dismissed Dr. Harris.

In the spring of 1831—about eight months after the present pastor's settlement—there was a revival of religion which brought into the church fifty new members.

In 1836 the church, in connection with the religious society associated with it, erected a new meeting-house; the one in which they now worship.

In 1858 another season of special religious interest was experienced, which brought into the church twenty-three new members. These were mainly heads of families, of the young and middle-aged portion of the community, whose acquisition greatly added to the strength of the church.

The church is united and prosperous, comprising about one fifth of the adult population in town: Resident members, 111—43 males, 68 females; absent, 18; total, 129. Number admitted by profession since the formation of the church, in 1789, three hundred and sixty.

There is one fact somewhat remarkable in relation to this church, which is, that it has never had but one pastor beside the present one, although it has not been a day without a settled minister for more than seventy years—a fact to which it would not be easy to find a parallel.

Dunbarton, April 30, 1860.

Baptist Society.

The first Baptist society was formed in the Spring of 1828, and in November of that year the first church was organized. The second society, at Page's Corner, was formed at the house of Peter C. Page.

Both the first and second societies were united at Dunbarton Centre, in November or December, 1846.

The Universalist Society was formed in 1830, by Nathan Gutterson, Joshua F. Hoyt, Silas Burnham, Alexander Gilchrist, and others.

The Methodist Society was formed about 1847, by John Cate, Moses W. Woodbury and Nathaniel Colby.

POST-OFFICES, &c.

The first post-office in this town was established at the central village, in 1817, when the Hon. Return Jonathan Meigs was Postmaster-General of the United States, and David Tenney appointed post-master. His commission is dated October 17, 1817. He was succeeded by James Allison, Richard Parkinson, Isaac Stearns, Samuel Burnham, Warren Perley and Moses Perley, the present incumbent.

Another post-office was established in the Gould District, called "East Dunbarton," but discontinued several years ago.

In 1834 a post-office was established at Page's Corner, called "North Dunbarton," and Adams Roberts appointed post-master. He declined the office, and Peter C. Page was appointed in his place. He was succeeded by John P. Tenney and George W. Page, the present post-master.

Prior to the year 1817 the letters to the people of this town "were few and far between." The nearest post-office was Concord. The principal newspapers taken were the Farmers' Cabinet, of Amherst, the New-Hampshire Patriot, by Isaac and W. R. Hill, and Tuttle's Concord Gazette, which were conveyed to the subscribers by the subscribers in turn. The editors notified them by writing upon their papers the words, "Your turn next." Upon receiving this notice, a person rode on horse-back to the place of publication, and brought the papers, directed to each individual subscriber; which were left at some central point for distribution.

Single horse wagons were rarely seen, in this region, in 1812. The first one we ever saw was brought into town by Ebenezer Chase. It was strong enough to sustain any load that two horses could draw.

Chaises, with square tops, had been for several years previously possessed by several persons. The first bel-lows-topped chaise brought into town, in 1808-9, was owned by Major C. Stark. An awkward old sulkey, in which he was once accustomed to ride, was sold to Dr. Green, of Concord, who used it until his death.

The pastures of this town were, even in early times, noted for supporting good cattle and horses, as was the town for possessing good riders. General Stark brought home a number of blood horses and mares, purchased at the sale of Burgoyne's army effects, at Saratoga, which acquisition much improved the breed of horses in this region.

TRADERS.

Major Caleb Stark opened the first store in this town, at "Page Corner." His assortment of goods was more extensive than that of any establishment within thirty miles. After he removed his store to the "Borough Farm" his transactions became more extended. Persons came from Connecticut river, and from places fifty miles or more distant, to trade with him.

We once heard him say that he had taken, in barter, 20,000 yards of tow and linen cloth in a year, and other country produce in proportion. He employed coopers to prepare casks for butter, beef, pork, and other matters, including pot and pearl ashes, for the Boston market; and teamsters were constantly in his pay, transporting freights in wagons to and from Boston, until, in connection with Isaac Riddle, Esq., he opened the navigation of the Merrimack river as far as Bedford.

The prosperity of his affairs induced him to engage in navigation. He built and owned several vessels. One of them was lost at sea, and another captured under the operation of the "British Orders in Council." By these disasters he sustained a loss of more than twenty-five thousand dollars. In 1806-7 he opened a mercantile establishment at Boston, in company with Mr. John McKinstry, his brother-in-law.

Before his removal thither, other stores were opened in town. The following persons, at times, were engaged in trade at Dunbarton Centre: Nathan Greeley, Peter Patterson (a lame man), Phinehas and Wm. Parker, William Green, David Tenney, James Allison, Allison & Evans, ——— & Brown, Leach & Poor, and Samuel Burnham, who is now the only store-keeper in Dunbarton. The traders at the "Page Road," since Major Stark's time, have been: William Green, Jeremiah Page, Jr., and John Kimball, Dudley & Sargent, Adams Roberts, William Follansbee, Oren Foster, Erastus Woodbury, and James Lord.

Bond and Contract for building the Meeting-House.

Know all men by these Presents, That we, Archibald Stinson, yeoman, and William Tenney, gentleman, both of Dunbarton, in the county of Hillsborough and State of New-Hampshire, are holden and stand firmly bound and obliged unto David Story and William Stinson, gentlemen, and James Clement, yeoman, all of said Dunbarton, in said State and county, a committee appointed by the inhabitants of Dunbarton to see that a meeting-house in said town be built and finished according to the vote of said town, at a legal meeting held at said Dunbarton on the second day of June, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, in the full and just sum of one thousand and fifty-four pounds, lawful money, to the which payment, well and truly to be made, we, the said Archibald Stinson and William Tenney, acknowledge ourselves and our heirs and assigns to stand jointly and severally bound and obliged unto the said David Story, William Stinson and James Clement, their heirs and assigns, in the capacity of a committee as aforesaid, in the above sum of one thousand and fifty-four pounds, lawful money. Sealed with (our) seals, and witnessed with our hands, this twenty-second day of June, Anno Domini 1789.

The conditions of the above Obligation, or Bond, are such, that whereas we, the said Archibald Stinson and William Tenney, this day have agreed to build a meeting-house in said Dunbarton, of the dimensions of fifty feet long and forty feet wide; said house to stand where the old meeting-house stands, or where the said committee shall stake out the ground where said house shall stand, and finish said house: Said house to be twenty-five feet posts, with a porch on the foreside of said house, of thirteen feet square, with the posts twenty-two feet high, and in said house are to be seventeen windows in the lower tier of windows, and twenty-eight squares of glass in each window: one of which windows to be circular headed, back of the pulpit; and twenty-one windows in the galleries and porch, of twenty-four squares each—the glass 7 by 9.

The outside of said house to be finished in Tuscan order, and good workmanship. Said house is to be underpinned with good hewn stones, equal to Capt. David Story's house (the foreside and west end of said Story's house), with door-stones for steps to said house, hewn equal to the underpinning.

West and Key Vaccas, we fell in with sloop Mary, of Mobile, Henry S. Neale, master. In consequence of falling in with this vessel we put back to Key West, where we anchored in the evening.

In the course of the afternoon we had ascertained to a certainty that we were once more among pirates; also, that Furlong and Shelton, two of Atwick's crew, had joined them. Next day took in water and sailed in company for Key Vaccas, where we arrived next morning. Brought the Lawrence to anchor, and ran the Mary ashore to clean her bottom. During several days all hands of both crews were employed in fitting the Mary for sea. During this time the Mary's name was erased, and she was painted black. It was generally understood by this time that both crews were to be united, and attached to the pirate. I forgot to mention that Jeffreys had been enticed on board the pirate at Key West, and very much against his will.

"The pirate being prepared for the cruise, both crews were mustered on board, the evening before sailing, where all of them were sworn and made to sign an agreement. Next morning we sailed, leaving Atwick on board the Lawrence as ship-keeper. Our crew consisted of Neal, Miller, Johnson, Smith, and a colored cook—5: the original crew. Chase, Reed, Shelton, Furlong and myself, of Atwick's crew—5, and Jeffrey from Key West. Whole crew, 11. We sailed, as nearly as I recollect, from Key West on the 25th of June, 1819.

On the second day spoke a large schooner from Mobile, bound to New-York. Neal purchased of the master a very fine boat, and we set ours, an old one, afloat. In the afternoon of this day fell in with the ship Rising States, from New-Orleans, bound for Holland. From this vessel took some provisions, and suffered her to proceed on her voyage.

"Third day at sea, June 27, at meridian, saw a sail ahead. At 1 P. M., it being calm, sent off the boat, which took possession of her at 4 P. M., our vessel being three miles astern. A breeze springing up, however, soon brought us up with the captured vessel. Neal hailed, and learned that she was recently from Cuba, bound to Cowes. She proved to be the brig Ann, of Scarborough, England, Thomas Sanley master. She was deeply laden with sugar and coffee.

“During the afternoon captain Sanley was sent on board the pirate with his papers, and, after they were examined, returned to the brig. Four of the brig’s crew, in the afternoon, were brought and detained on board the pirate. Neal had an interview with them, in the cabin of the pirate, and informed them what was to be done on board the brig.

“After dusk, Sanley, his mate, and three of the brig’s crew were killed and thrown overboard by Miller, Johnson, Furlong, Smith and Shelton. While the pirates were killing the brig’s crew, a boy hid himself among the cargo. He was soon found after the decks had been cleared of the dead bodies. His life was spared, and also those of four of the brig’s crew. Thomas Newton, Sanley’s nephew, three others of the crew and the boy were released. Five were massacred and five were spared.

“At the time the brig’s crew were killed we were in the Gulf of Florida, ninety miles from land. After these transactions we shaped our course W. by N., steering for the nearest land of East Florida. Next morning we saw the land, and coasted through the day south-westerly, and at sunset ran the brig on shore. The sloop was brought alongside the brig, and most of the crew were employed throughout the night in loading the sloop with coffee. Next day finished loading the sloop, and sent a boat’s crew to inform Atwick of the result of the cruise; sent two of the brig’s crew, and Chase, Reed, Shelton and Johnson — six in all.

“Next day Neal sailed with the sloop, taking with him Miller, the cook of the vessel, and the boy above referred to. Furlong and Smith were left in charge of affairs on board the brig, with Thomas Newton, another of the brig’s crew, Jeffrey, and myself — six in number. Some ten days after Neal left us, we discovered a sail running along shore, standing southward. She was brought to an anchor, by the orders of Furlong and Smith, and proved to be the schooner Francisco, Capt. Ives, last from St. Augustine, now bound to Havana, intending to call at Key West to take from thence Jeffreys and myself. Ives brought his vessel alongside the brig, discharged into the sea a considerable portion of his cargo of salt and flour from her, and took on board coffee. A gentleman on board the Francisco was robbed of several hundred dollars, of which Furlong and Smith took charge. When the Francisco was loaded, Jeffreys and myself, having liberty to leave, went on board the schooner and left the brig.

“The same night anchored fifteen miles south of the brig. This afternoon we saw Atwick’s vessel bound for the brig. We had on board two deserters, who, with myself, left the vessel, went on shore, and resided for a time at the camp belonging to other deserters. Having remained there ten days, in the middle of July we left for the brig. Our party consisted of six individuals, four of whom were deserters from the army. Having arrived opposite the brig, we found rolling in the surf a boat and several oars on the beach — cleared the boat and went on board — no person was found on board — but two thirds of her cargo still remained. The same evening sent two men to Cape Florida for a wrecking vessel.

“Next morning I left for St. Augustine, distant 250 miles. Late in the morning of the third day after leaving, I arrived at a river some 70 or 80 miles from the vessel, where, not finding either boat or canoe, I commenced my journey back.

“In the evening of the third day I arrived at the brig, and found there five Seminole Indians — three men, one woman and a child — friendly Indians — learned from our people that those who went for a wrecker succeeded in procuring an American vessel, which next morning arrived. She was the sloop, “Sailors’ Rights,” of Savannah, Levi James master. She was brought alongside of the brig and loaded with coffee, after which we endeavored to lighten the vessel, so as to get her afloat; and sent on shore several hogsheads of coffee and hove overboard boxes of sugar. The vessel remained with us until appearances indicated a gale of wind, when, for the safety of the wrecker, she sailed early in the morning for Savannah, leaving on board the brig several of the crew, besides the deserters and myself.

“When the “Sailors’ Rights” left us, Capt. James said, should it become necessary, we must cut away the masts, and at 11 A. M., the vessel laboring in a heavy sea-way, we cut away both masts. In the afternoon the vessel stove a hole in her bottom, and in the first part of the night we were driven before the sea upon the beach. Next morning the weather had become calm, and at low water we left the vessel, and made from her sails a camp on shore, in which we lived. At low water we could go aboard at the bows without wetting our feet, while at the stern the water was five or six feet deep.

“Before the vessel gained the shore she was nearly half filled with water, which at the stern continued at that depth. One half the cargo was destroyed.

“Some two or three weeks after Capt. James left us, a small schooner, which had been chartered for the purpose, arrived and took a load with which she sailed for Savannah. Soon afterwards the “Sailors’ Rights,” James, master, arrived, took in the remainder of the brig’s cargo, all the iron, copper, &c., that could be collected, burnt her to the water’s edge, and sailed for Savannah. The deserters and myself took passage on board of her. The deserters were returned to the army, and I was committed to Savannah jail. This happened about September 7, 1819.

“Before this, Furlong, Smith, and one of the brig’s crew, had been apprehended at Savannah, and those who were with Atwick had been taken at Charleston. Smith died in prison before trial. Furlong was tried in December, and found guilty.*

“I was honorably discharged from prison towards the latter part of December, 1819, having been a prisoner three months and nineteen days. I was allowed $1.25 per day as State evidence,[¶] and received for the check, from Hon. I. H. Morel at the bank, $136.

“Some time in February, 1820, I went to Augusta, where for a time I was employed by the steamboat company. From thence I went to Columbia, S. C., near which I was employed on the west side of the Congaree river, upon the Charleston turnpike. I left this place for Charleston, thence for Savannah on board a coaster. From the latter place shipped on board the brig Alba, Capt. Smith, for Salem, where we arrived about the middle of July. I forgot to mention that Furlong was hung at Savannah a few weeks before my return thither. From Salem I proceeded to Boston, where, having worked along shore a short time, I walked to Dunbarton, having been absent two years and nine months. I reached home in August, and in September went to Pembroke, where I attended the academy two months, under the instruction of Mr. Vose† an experienced teacher.”

Mr. Harris was more than two months under the age of twenty-one, when he returned home after the adventures herein before recorded.

* A relative of the writer, Mr. John McKinstry, formerly a merchant at Boston, who well knew the Rev. Walter Harris and his family, being fortunately at this time at Savannah, was, on reference to him being made by Mr. E. L. Harris, summoned to court. He testified that the father of Mr. Harris was a highly respectable clergyman at Dunbarton, N. H., as his son had declared. This testimony, his youth, with other circumstances tending to corroborate the truth of his statements, induced the court to admit him as a State witness; and upon his testimony principally, the pirates were convicted.

We received the above account from Mr. McKinstry, on his return from Savannah.

INDIVIDUAL NOTICES.

ARCHIBALD STARK.

Archibald Stark, although never a permanent inhabitant of Dunbarton, was the first applicant for the grants of that township, of which he was a large proprietor, and which for fourteen years bore his name.

He was born at Glasgow, Scotland, in 1697, and received his education at the university in that city. At an early age he removed with his father and family to Londonderry, Ireland, where he married Eleanor Nichols, the daughter of a Scottish emigrant.

In 1720 he embarked with a company of adventurers for New-Hampshire, whither a considerable party of his countrymen had previously proceeded to form a settlement.

After a tedious voyage, during which all his children died, the emigrants arrived at Boston, late in autumn. As many of them were ill with the small-pox, they were not permitted to land, and were in consequence compelled to depart for the wilds of Maine. At a place called Sheepscot, near the site of the present town of Wiscasset, they endured their first trial of the horrors of a northern winter in the forests of New-England.

In the course of the year following, after encountering and enduring many severe hardships and privations, they joined their Scottish friends at Nutfield (now Londonderry, N. H.), then a wilderness, rendered hideous by the frequent incursions of hostile savages, who at that period, and for many succeeding years, harassed the frontiers. His house in Londonderry having been burned in 1736, he, in consequence, removed to that portion of land on Merrimack river then known as Harrytown, and settled upon a lot which had been granted to Samuel Thaxter by the government of Massachusetts, a short distance above the falls of Amoskeag.

Thither several of his friends soon afterward followed him, and the new location received the name of Derryfield. Several sons and daughters were born to him after his arrival in America, to whom, at his fireside, he gave the best instruction which his own acquirements and the circumstances of the times would permit. "His education fitted him for the walks of civil life; yet," says the historian of Manchester, "we find him a volunteer for the protection of the frontier against the ravages of the Indians in 1745; and for the protection of the people in his immediate vicinity, a fort was built at the outlet of Swager's, or Fort brook, which, in compliment to his enterprise in erecting and garrisoning the same, was called Stark's Fort.

His sons were William, Samuel, John and Archibald, who all held commissions in the British service during the "Seven Years' War," and were distinguished for good conduct, coolness and courage.

A stone in the old burial ground at Manchester bears this inscription :

"Here Lyes The Body of Mr.
ARCHIBALD STARK. HE
Departed this life June 25th,
1758, Aged 61 Years."

COLONEL WILLIAM STARK, eldest son of the foregoing, was born at Londonderry, April 1st, 1724, (Old Style). He was among those to whom the proprietors first granted lands in this town, in the early affairs of which he was an active and prominent agent. He had acquired a good education for the times, was a fair penman, and a prompt man of business. The meetings of the proprietors and of the town were, for several years prior to the erection of the first meeting-house, held at his house.

He was a man of plausible address, possessing a chivalrous spirit and undaunted courage. He was distinguished as a captain of rangers on the northern frontier; was with Amherst at the capture of Louisburgh, and fought under the victorious banners of Wolfe on the heights of Abraham. At the commencement of the Revolution, his inclination was favorable to the popular cause. The cannonade of June 17, 1775, at Bunker Hill, the day being fair and the wind favorable, was distinctly heard at his house on the high lands of Dunbarton, although at the distance of seventy miles. In consequence he mounted his horse and rode with all speed toward Charlestown, but did not reach the American camp until after the action.

He applied to the State Council of New-Hampshire for the command of a regiment, to which his previous services and military experience amply justified his claim. Had he obtained the appointment he would doubtless have proved true to the cause, and rendered important service, for, as a soldier, his talents and courage were unquestionable. For reasons best known to themselves, the Council assigned the command to another.

Stark, indignant at what he considered an unjust and insulting neglect, accepted overtures from the enemy, repaired to New-York in 1776, and became a colonel in the British service. He was soon afterward killed by a fall from his horse. His son John served as adjutant of the first continental regiment of the New-Hampshire line, and died of small-pox at Chimney Point, on Lake Champlain, in 1776, in the eighteenth year of his age.

Family Record.—William Stark, b. April 1, 1724 (Old Style); Mary Stinson, b. March 3, 1734, married February 22, 1754, (N. S.) Children: William, b. August 27, 1756; John, b. November 1, 1758; Archibald, b. November 7, 1760; Mary, b. August 19, 1762; Stephen, b. September 27, 1764; Thomas, b. January 25, 1767; James, b. March 22, 1773.

Mary, the wife of William Stark, senior, died October 15, 1817, aged 82. We have in possession a powder-horn, thus inscribed: "William Stark, his horn. Sandy Hook, 1757, or 1759," the last figure being indistinct. It is a well made article, with a metallic mouth-piece, ornamented with sundry devices, and was the work of Captain William Stark, who commanded a corps of rangers in Lord Loudoun's eastern expedition, in 1757, who, in the same capacity, attended that of General Amherst against Louisburg, and that of General Wolfe against Quebec, in 1759.

In each of these campaigns the forces which sailed from New-York were detained a short time at Sandy Hook. Therefore, whether the horn was made in 1757 or 1759, the fact appears more than probable that the owner had it slung by his side in the memorable battle on the heights of Abraham, September 13, 1759, which decided the fate of Canada, and crowned with laurels many of New-England's gallant sons; although the conquest was purchased by the life-blood of the amiable and heroic Wolfe.

In connection with his lofty name, we copy a passage from the memoir of the celebrated John Robinson, in the Edinburgh Encyclopædia:

"An anecdote which Mr. Robinson used to tell," says Mr. Playfair, "deserves well to be mentioned. He happened to be on duty in the boat in which General Wolfe went to visit some of their posts, the night before the battle which was expected to decide the fate of the campaign. The evening was fine, and the scene, considering the work we were engaged in, and the morning to which we were looking forward, sufficiently impressive.

"As they rowed along, the General, with much feeling, repeated nearly the whole of Gray's Elegy (which had appeared not long before, and was yet but little known, to an officer who sat with him in the stern of the boat), adding, as he concluded, that he "would prefer being the author of that poem, to the glory of beating the French to-morrow."

"To-morrow came, and the life of that illustrious soldier was terminated amid the tears of his friends and the shouts of his victorious army. The body of General Wolfe was brought to England in the Royal William, and landed at Spithead on the 18th of November."

ARCHIBALD STARK, youngest brother of Colonel William Stark, and of General John Stark, was a lieutenant in the ranger corps, and among the first grantees of this town. He died at Hopkinton, at the age of 90. His son James was a skillful physician and surgeon, and settled at Hopkinton. In 1813 he was appointed a surgeon in the United States Army. He died at Hopkinton in 1827-8.

Lieutenant SAMUEL STARK, brother of Archibald, above named, settled in Conway, N. H., where his descendants are persons of property and respectability.

All the sons of Archibald Stark, senior, received from the British crown extensive grants of land in the vicinity of Conway, as a reward for their distinguished services in the "Seven Years' War."

Captain JONATHAN STARK, of Conway, son of Samuel, was an officer of the U. S. Army during the war of 1812.

MAJOR ROBERT ROGERS. This justly celebrated commander, so well known in the campaigns of the "Seven Years' War" in America, was the son of James Rogers, and born at Londonderry in 1727. He was probably fourteen or fifteen years of age when his father established his abode in the woods of Dunbarton. He dwelt there with him, except when engaged in distant hunting expeditions, until his death, or until the year 1755, when his well known prowess as a hunter, his knowledge of the Indian character, as also of their modes of warfare, and his daring resolution, recommended him as a suitable person to command a corps of rangers. His services rendered in that capacity justified the confidence of the government. In person he was above the common stature, and as remarkable for personal strength and activity as for courage and decision.

He went to England after the peace of 1763, and while traveling in a mail-coach over Hounslow Heath, the coach was stopped by a highwayman, who presented a pistol at the window, and demanded the passengers' money. The Major opened his cloak, as if about to comply, and the robber lowered his pistol. That instant, the vigorous hand of the hardy American seized him by the collar, and by main strength drew him from his horse through the window of the coach, and made him prisoner, and ordered the terrified coachman to drive on. He proved to be a celebrated offender, for whose head a reward of £40 sterling had been offered. The Major delivered him to the authorities and received the bounty.

One other anecdote is related of him while in England. He was once in company with a party of British officers at a convivial meeting, where it was agreed that the person who should tell the greatest lie, or the most improbable story, should have his bill paid by the company. After all the others had told their stories, Rogers was called upon. He stated "that he was born in the province of New-Hampshire—that when a boy, he made birch or hazel brooms, which he carried on his back, through the woods, to Concord, (the nearest settlement, ten miles distant) and disposed of them—that his father was shot dead by a hunter, being mistaken for a bear—that his mother was tracked several miles by a hunter, who mistook the track in the snow for that of a wolf." It was decided that the Major had told the greatest lie, when in fact he had told the truth.

Rogers returned to America in 1775. He visited Cambridge and Medford, then occupied by the Continental troops. He applied for permission to visit the camp, which Washington refused. Colonel Stark, who had been his second in command in the Seven Years' War, with others of his old companions in arms, visited him at Medford. He soon after joined Sir William Howe, but in a short time returned to England, and never again visited America.

General Stark, who had been for years the companion and friend of Rogers, gave him full credit for his courage, and was of opinion that he would have proved a true man to his native country, had not suspicions been prematurely entertained of his designs. He was denounced as a tory before he had avowed his principles. Washington considered him as a British agent, and as such prohibited his entering the camp. Rogers owned an estate in Concord, N. H. He left his wife in this country, and the estate remained in the possession of his family until about 1833, when it became the property of Ex-Governor Hill. A more particular account of Major Rogers and his services may be found in a work lately published, entitled "A Memoir of General Stark," &c. A lot of land was set apart for him by the proprietors of Dunbarton, as the eldest son of James Rogers. Another was given by them to the eldest son of Joseph Putney (being lot No. 8, in the fifth range, and lot No. 8, in the sixth range.)

The wife of Major Rogers was a Miss Browne of Portsmouth. He was appointed a colonel in the British service, and raised a corps known as the queen's rangers, with which he was for a time a scourge to the country in the vicinity of Long Island Sound. He was proscribed by the N. H. Legislature in 1778. His wife was divorced by an act of the Legislature. When and where he died is unknown to the writer.

Anecdote of Rogers.—While in garrison at Fort Edward, in the winter of 1757–8, two British officers, half seas over, or sufficiently so to be very affectionate and patriotic, were one evening lamenting the misfortunes of their country, occasioned by her enormous debt. Rogers coming in, and learning the cause of their trouble, told them to give themselves no more uneasiness about the matter, as he would pay half of the debt, and a friend of his the remainder, and thus clear the nation at once of her difficulties. The officers treated the captain, and pronounced him the nation's benefactor. Hence the saying, "To pay one's debts, as Rogers did that of the nation."

CAPTAIN CALEB PAGE.

CALEB PAGE, who may be considered as a principal character among the forefathers of the town, was born in the year 1705. He, with other individuals, from Hampstead, Haverhill, and their vicinity, were among the early settlers of Derryfield. He was one of the grantees of Starkstown, and was in the charter of incorporation, in 1765, named as the person authorized to call the first meeting of the inhabitants, under that instrument. He was a large proprietor in the new township, in the northern part of which, upon lot No. 18, in the third range, a fort was erected, and his permanent residence established.

The locality still bears the name of "Page Corner," and the road leading to it from the east is called the "Page road." This road now (1860) contains many well built and tastily arranged dwelling-houses, and exhibits a more ostensible claim to the title of "the city," than it did when thus termed in former days. The house of Captain Page and that of Israel Clifford were the first frame buildings erected in that vicinity.

Captain Page was one of the most efficient coöperators in advancing the progress of the settlement. At the proprietors' meetings he acted frequently as moderator, as general agent, chairman of the most important committees, and for several years as proprietors' clerk.*

In 1753 Captain Page was, with Col. Zacheus Lovewell and Major John Talford, appointed by the General Court of New-Hampshire, commissioners "to survey and make (or mark) a road to Coös," in which service he acted as surveyor as well as commissioner. The following account for the performance of their duties upon this expedition was presented by the commissioners to the General Court of the Province :

* The notice dated March 27, 1751, calling the proprietors' first general meeting at Londonderry, held on the 8th of April, 1751, was signed by Alexander McMurphy, who had been appointed by a committee consisting of Archibald Stark, Hugh Ramsay, and John Hogg. Mr. McMurphy was succeeded, as proprietors' clerk, by Caleb Page, senior. His son, Jeremiah Page, was third proprietors' clerk, and made his last record, in that capacity, of their meeting which was dissolved on the second Tuesday of September, 1802.

March, 1753. Messrs. Zacheus Lovewell, John Talford and Caleb Page charge y^e Province of New-Hampshire, debtor for themselves and men, here named, hired to survey and make the road to Coös, in March current:

* Jonathan Burbank, Robert Rogers and John Stark were officers in the corps of Royal American Rangers. Capt. Burbank was killed in a skirmish in 1769.

In 1758 Caleb Page was appointed by Governor Wentworth a Captain of Provincials. The following commission describes the extent of his command :

[L. S.] PROVINCE OF NEW-HAMPSHIRE.

BENNING WENTWORTH, Esq., Captain-General and Governor-in-Chief in and over His Majesty's Province of New-Hampshire, in New-England, &c. :

To CALEB PAGE, Gentleman,

GREETING :

By virtue of the power and authority in and by His Majesty's Royal Commission to me granted, to be Captain General, &c., over this, His Majesty's Province of New-Hampshire, aforesaid, I do (by these presents,) reposing especial trust and confidence in your loyalty, courage and good conduct, constitute and appoint you, the said Caleb Page, to be Captain of the foot company in Starkstown (so-called), in Hopkinton (so-called), in Goffstown (so-called), and in Halestown (so-called), in Colonel Zacheus Lovewell's Regiment.

You are, therefore, carefully and diligently to discharge the duty of a Captain, in leading, ordering and exercising said company in arms, both inferior officers and soldiers ; and to keep them in good order and discipline, hereby commanding them to obey you as their captain ; and yourself to observe and follow such orders and instructions as you shall from time to time receive from me, or the Commander-in-Chief for the time being, or other your superior officers for His Majesty's service, according to military rules and discipline, pursuant to the trust reposed in you.

Given under my hand and seal at arms, at Portsmouth, the thirtieth day of May, in the thirty-first year of the reign of His Majesty King George the Second, Anno Domini 1758.

B. W. WENTWORTH.

By his Excellency's command,

THEODORE ATKINSON, Sec'y.

Captain Page possessed a noble and benevolent spirit, with ample means to carry out his generous intentions. His bank, which contained his treasure of golden guineas, silver crowns and dollars, was a half bushel measure constantly kept under his bed—a far more secure place of deposit than many modern offices of discount have proved to be. One of his guineas was, some thirty-five years ago, turned up in his field by the plough. His grandson, Caleb Stark, remembered being with him near the place where the coin was found, when a person who had purchased a cow paid for it in the field; that a guinea was part of the purchase money paid, and that Captain Page, missing the piece after his return home, supposed the man had smuggled the guinea back to his own pocket. The coin is still in possession of the family.

His house was the abode of hospitality, and the scene of many a joyous festival, in the “olden time,” where good cheer was supplied in bounteous profusion. There, at all times, the traveler, although a stranger, found welcome, refreshment and repose. One of his adventures was as follows: Having a quantity of fresh beef to dispose of, he conveyed it to Newburyport for a market, and there, finding a vessel about sailing for Louisburgh, then in possession of the English, he took passage with his stores for that fortress. A contractor of the British fleet eagerly purchased his supplies at high prices, but delayed payment. Ascertaining that the fleet was under “sailing orders” for the next day, Captain Page went on board the flag-ship and stated his case to the Admiral. The latter, a good-humored, prompt, and justly deciding son of Neptune, ordered the contractor to appear before him. Upon his appearance the Admiral said to him: “Do you owe this man (so much), sir?” naming the amount. He answered affirmatively. “Then pay him, or you swing at the yard-arm.” The amount was instantly paid, and Capt. Page returned home with the proceeds of a profitable venture.

In his time black slaves were possessed by every opulent family. He owned several of either sex, whose condition, his own, and the benovolence of each of his wives

(he was twice married,) rendered comfortable in every respect. They were by their servants honored and revered rather as indulgent parents than as master and mistress. He was a firm patriot, and was in 1775 elected a delegate to the Provincial Congress, the first from this town. Toward the close of his life he attended the funeral of a friend at the meeting-house burial-ground in the Spring. Water had risen in the grave, as is generally the case there at that season. When he returned home he declared that "he would not be drowned after death," and on the next day purchased a small burial lot of Soloman Heath, in the adjacent town of Bow, on the Concord road, where, after his death, his remains were laid at rest in July, 1785, at the age of 80 years.

The Rev. William Fessenden and Rev. William Pickels, the latter an Episcopal clergyman, who were his particular friends, frequently tarried with him as guests, and assisted in the education of his family.

His family consisted of two sons and two daughters. His eldest son, Caleb Page, Jr., was an ensign of Rangers, and fell in the bloody contest between Ticonderoga and Crown Point, January 21, 1757. His second son, Jeremiah, was a well educated man of business. He was an expert surveyor, and laid out most of the early town and many other roads. He was many years representative, justice of the peace, and also judge of the court of common pleas for Hillsborough county.* He died November 29, 1807.

Of Capt. Page's daughters, the eldest, Elizabeth, was the wife of Gen. Stark, and Mary, the youngest, the wife of James Russell, of Bow. A stone, near Gen. Stark's monument at Manchester, is thus inscribed: "In memory of Mrs. Elizabeth Stark, who died June 29, 1814, in the 77th year of her age."

* The judges of Hillsborough county in 1796 were: "Hon. James Underwood, 1st Justice. Francis Blood, Esq., Temple; Jeremiah Page, Esq., Dunbarton; †Ebenezer Webster, Esq., Salisbury, Justices. Moses Kelley, Goffstown, Sheriff; Robert Fletcher, Esq., Clerk."

† Ebenezer Webster was father of the Hon. Daniel Webster.

His valuable estate was divided between his surviving children, and his grandsons, Caleb Stark and Caleb Page. The former had been adopted and brought up by him from infancy. He resided with him from the time of his birth, until two hours before daylight on the 16th of June, 1775, when, without the knowledge of the family, he was armed, on horseback, and on the way to the camp at Medford, where he arrived at night. On the 17th of June he performed his devoir in arms, in the action of Breed's Hill, called that of Bunker's Hill, although the latter eminence is one mile north of the scene of conflict.

Of the sons of Judge Page, Caleb, the third of the name in this place, lived and died upon the homestead of his grandfather, at Page Corner. His brothers, John and Jeremiah, resided upon the divided estate of their father. The farm of the latter is now owned by his son, Ebenezer, who is a respectable citizen, and has filled the offices of selectman and representative. That of John Page is owned by his grand-nephew, John P. Tenney, who is also grandson of the Rev. Walter Harris. Caleb Page, fourth of the name, grandson of Capt. Page, settled upon the lot once occupied by Archibald Stark, Jr., (lot 14, R. 3). He was an industrious farmer and peaceable citizen. He was treasurer and selectman, and on his retirement from public duties received a vote of thanks for faithful service. He died September 17, 1846, aged 63.

His brothers were Peter Carleton, and John, both worthy men. Peter C. died after a short illness, October 15, 1858, aged 75. John resides in Hopkinton.

Family Record.—Caleb Page, son of Jeremiah Page, senior, was born April 10, 1753. The children of himself and wife Hannah, were: Sarah, b. April 18, 1776; Hannah, b. February 3, 1778; Caleb, b. June 23, 1780; Peter C., b. July 1, 1783; Betsey, b. November 2, 1786; Nancy, b. November 30, 1789; John, b. February 28, 1783.

ITEMS copied from a Map of the Town drawn in 1803, copied and improved from the original plan, prepared at Portsmouth in 1749.

On lot No. 8, range 6, is the stump of an apple-tree, planted prior to 1746. On lot 13, range 2, is to be seen the cellar of Samuel Stinson's house, and near it the remains of a sweet apple-tree, planted by him as first settler upon the lot. On lot 18, range 2, stood a pine of seven feet diameter, and also Page Fort. An elm and oak on lot 17, range 3, were seven feet in diameter; as also an oak on lot 10, range 3. On lot 15, range 5, was a pine, six feet; and on lot 16, range 3, stood a pine, ten feet in diameter.

Since writing the foregoing we have received a communication, from which we gather the following information relating to the Page family:

August 26, 1705; m'd Ruth Wallingford, of Boston, Mass., in 1729, and resided in Haverhill for a time, when he removed to Atkinson, in 1749. He there owned land extending a mile, more or less, in every direc-tion from the site of the academy. He sold this land for the weight of his wife in silver dollars. The price amounted to about five thousand dollars.

In 1751 he moved to Dunbarton, then a wilderness. His daughter Elizabeth, who came there in 1752, has often stood sentinel at his fort for hours, with a loaded musket, on the lookout for enemies in the shape of Indians. She was accustomed to procure water from "One Stack Brook," bringing it thence in a gallon bottle, and perform the duties of cook for her father.

His first wife died in 1740. His children were: Caleb, b. 1729; Jeremiah, b. 1730; Elizabeth, b. 1736; Mary, b. 1738. For his second wife he married Mrs. Carleton, who died in October, 1785. She was a large person, weighing 315 pounds. She was conveyed to meeting upon an ox sled, and when she visited a friend, her large square arm chair, with circular back, was conveyed with her. At her death the chair became the property of Major Caleb Stark. [We may also add that in the same chair we are sitting while preparing this notice of the Page family.]

In March, 1753, the Governor of New-Hampshire sent Capt. Caleb Page, Col. Lovewell, of Dunstable, and Major Talford, of Chester, to survey and mark out a road from Stevenstown (Salisbury) to Haverhill, Coös Co. John Stark (afterwards General,) who, having been conveyed over the route as an Indian captive the previous year, and being well acquainted with the wilderness, acted as their pilot. The Governor and Council sent Capt. Page a commission as one of His Majesty's justices of the peace. He declined being qualified as such, but requested the appointment for his son Jeremiah, by whom it was accepted.

His son Caleb, jr., was an ensign of Rangers, and slain in the action of Jan. 21, 1757, near Ticonderoga. He is said to have been the handsomest man of the Page race. He owned lot No. 18, in the third range. Captain Spike-man and Lieut. Kennedy fell in the same action. On this occasion fourteen were killed, six wounded, six missing.

Mary Page m'd Deacon James Russell, of Bow, who died in 1797. Their children were Jeremiah P., James, Mary, Betsey, Peggy and Achsah. Captain Page and his second wife were buried in Heath's graveyard in Bow, within six feet of the road from Page Corner to Concord. A cluster of wild cat-tail willows grows up on their grave. His first wife was buried at Haverhill, Mass.

Fourth Generation.—Jeremiah Page, son of Caleb (3d gen.), b. in 1730; died November 29, 1807; married Sarah Merrill, of Billerica, Mass.; b. 1732; m'd 1752; d. Sept. 15, 1807. Judge Page bought of Samuel Smith lot No. 17, third range, where he lived and died. He was one of the Committee of Safety, with Hogg and Sargent, in the Revolution. He was chosen a delegate to the State Convention in 1778, to form a constitution, receiving so much opposition from the Tories that his election was not effected until ten days previous to their assembling. He was the first member from Dunbarton to the General Court, and reelected many years; was a justice of the peace and quorum, and judge of the court of common pleas for Hillsborough county. He was the king's surveyor, and as such performed much of the business of the State and county. He was an astronomer, and in 1804 calculated the total eclipse of the sun which happened in 1806. He died a farmer at the age of 77.

DAVID STORY, Esq., one of the Justices of the Peace for the County of Hillsborough: In behalf of said State complains Caleb Stark, and gives your honor to understand that one "Use me Well," a pedlar, who declares that to be his name, and not to be his name, being a transient traveler, trader and pedlar, and also offering a yard-stick, and declaring it to be the measure he uses, that is short measure, with an intent to defraud the good people of this State, and contrary to the law in that case made and provided: Therefore he prays your honor to issue your warrant to apprehend said "Use me Well," that he may be dealt with as to law and justice shall appertain.

CALEB STARK.

JOHN WHIPPLE and ABRAHAM B. STORY, witnesses.

Mr. "Use me Well" was arrested by a warrant from Mr. Justice Story, but we have no report of the proceedings, to show what was the result, or whether the person's true name was "USE ME WELL," or some other convenient appellation.—Minutes from Jeremiah Page's Justice Docket.

In 1789, one Abel Rowell was arrested, and charged with burning the meeting-house in Hopkinton, on the complaint of Thomas Bailey, Benjamin B. Darling and Philip Greeley.

"For damages and cost, he was ordered to be sold to labor for three months, to work, to any citizen of the United States, by said Mills, the complainant.

JEREH. PAGE, Jus. Peace."

The prisoner was sold at the tavern of Israel Clifford, and employed to break and clean flax. After he had dressed as much as he could carry, he escaped with it to parts unknown.

All the judges, at this period, signed blank writs, and among Judge Page's papers are many accounts for blanks signed for Edward St. Loe Livermore, Peter Green, Arthur Livermore, Charles Walker, Philip and Obadiah Carrigain, and others, practising lawyers of Hillsborough and Rockingham courts. The judge was a calm, quiet, agreeable man, and seldom ruffled by any event. One of his sayings was that "molasses caught more flies than vinegar." The Page family were of English origin.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM STINSON.

William Stinson was one of the early settlers of this town under the Masonian Grant, of 1751; was born of Scottish parents, in Ireland, March 15, 1725. From that country, while young, he emigrated with his father to Londonderry, in New-Hampshire. In the year 1751-2 he commenced a settlement in Starkstown, where for a time he lived alone in a log cabin. While he thus dwelt in this plain and unpretending abode, he received as a visitor the Rev. David McGregore, who dined with him. "Not having a table," says the historian of Londonderry, "nor anything that would answer for a better substitute, he was obliged to make use of a basket, turned up. The Rev. Mr. McGregore having been requested to solicit a blessing, pertinently and devoutly implored that his host might be blessed 'in his basket and in his store.' This was literally verified, as Mr. Stinson became one of the most wealthy men in the vicinity. He abominated idle people. He acted a prominent part in the settlement of the township, and filled, with credit to himself, many offices of trust and importance. Industrious and prudent in the management of his personal affairs, he became one of the most substantial freeholders within twenty miles of his residence."

We have heard from those present accounts of the festival at his house when two of his daughters were married. It continued two days, on each of which a wedding was solemnized. On this occasion the spirit of Scotch-Irish hospitality was exhibited in bounteous profusion. There, "clansmen and kindred, and brothers and all," were bidden, and answered the invitation by their personal appearance. The whole affair may truly be considered as a generous "outpouring from the horn of plenty," such as our town has not since witnessed.

The parties most particularly interested in these festivities were Moses Chandler, of Hopkinton, and Miss Nelly Stinson; Mr. Silas P. Mosure, of Salem, Mass., and Miss Eliza Stinson. The officiating clergyman was the Rev. Walter Harris.

This double wedding celebration happened the year after the death of Captain Stinson. The lady who married Silas P. Mosure made an unfortunate match. She afterwards married David Page.

Thomas, the fourth son of Capt. William Stinson, senior, inherited a portion of his father's large estate, with his mansion house. His farm, after a number of years' occupancy by him, became the property of Deacon James Patterson, who, after residing upon it a few years, reconveyed it to the Stinson family. Mr. Patterson was an intelligent and scientific husbandman. He introduced many improvements upon the estate. We heard of him last as living in an active, "green old age," in some town in Massachusetts. His son James has traveled much in Europe, and is now head of the carrier department of the Boston post-office.

In 1796 Captain Stinson presented a clock to the town, which was placed on the gallery in the old meeting-house, fronting the pulpit. Within a few years it has been torn from its place, and demolished by the school-boys of the vicinity, who, in their heedless ravages, manifested neither respect for the sanctity of the place or the generosity of the donor.

Capt. Stinson died August 21, 1803, aged 78. He left a large real and personal estate. A considerable portion of his real property is owned by his grandsons, Charles and William C. Stinson, who are industrious and wealthy agriculturists, as also respectable members of society. The former has held several town offices, and in the years 1859 and 1860 was elected representative to the legislature.

Capt. WILLIAM STINSON, junior, second son of William, senior, was an excellent farmer and intelligent man. He was often employed in town affairs; was liberal and hospitable. His wife was a superior woman, and his house one of the most agreeable visiting places in town. He was the father of Charles and William, above named; as also of several daughters, one of whom, Letitia, is the wife of Col. William Kent, of Concord. Capt. William Stinson, jr., died April 8, 1822, aged 60.

JOHN STINSON, brother of the above, was two years at Dartmouth college. He held at times the principal offices of the town; was selectman twenty-three years, and four years representative; also major of the ninth regiment.

He was a man of firm principles and spotless integrity. Attached in early life to the cause of the democratic republican party, he was a strenuous advocate of popular rights and religious freedom. He exerted a powerful influence over the affairs of his native town.

DAVID STINSON, brother of William, senior, was slain by the Indians while hunting on Baker's river, in Rumney, April 29, 1752. His companions in the hunt were William Stark, John Stark and Amos Eastman. The name of Stinson has been bestowed upon a pond and brook in the vicinity of the place of his death. For particulars of this affair, see Memoir of Gen. Stark.

Family Record.—William Stinson, b. March 15, 1725; Agnes Caldwell, b. June, 1734; married March 26, 1754. Children: David, b. Dec. 18, 1754; Margaret, b. Feb. 29, 1756; Mary, b. Nov. 15, 1757; Agnes, b. March 3, 1760; William, jr., b. March 4, 1762; Jean, b. March 17, 1764; James, b. June, 1769; Thomas, b. August 15, 1771; John, b. Oct. 17, 1773; Nelly, b. April 10, 1777; Elizabeth, b. July 3, 1779; Mary, b. Jan. 25, 1782.

ARCHIBALD STINSON was born August 31, 1740. He was a thrifty farmer and large proprietor of land; a firm patriot in the trying days of the Revolution, and ardently supported the republican administrations of his country. He, with eight others, voted for Jefferson in 1796. The persons who thus voted were Archibald Stinson, John Stinson, Thomas Ayer, Israel and Jonathan Clifford, Simon Bailey,* Maj. Caleb Stark and Asa Burnham.

* We remember Mr. Bailey as a well-informed, plausible and polite old gentleman. He was exceedingly firm in his republican principles, and zealous in their support. He was commonly called "Governor Bailey," but in copying all the votes ever given in this town for Governor, we found none recorded for Simon Bailey. He died at a great age. He was once moderator, and frequently sealer of leather. He wore shorts, with knee-buckles, and boots or shoes, with pointed, turning upward toes. In personal appearance he resembled President Van Buren, more than any person we ever saw.

Jonathan Clifford is now living. These individuals may therefore be considered as the founders of the democratic republican party in this town. Their vote, at this time, was confirmed by the Presidential election of 1800-1801, which placed Thomas Jefferson at the head of the nation.

In 1789, June 22, Mr. Stinson, in company with William Tenney, contracted to build the meeting-house, and finish the same on or before the first day of November, 1790.

He acquired a handsome estate, and was reputed as an honest, liberal and active member of the community. He was particularly indulgent and agreeable to young persons.

Family Record.—Archibald Stinson, b. August 3, 1740; married March 19, 1771. Children: William, b. May 25, 1772; Jeremiah, b. April 4, 1775; John, b. Sept. 27, 1777; Sally, b. Sept. 27, 1779; Betsey, b. Sept. 24, 1781; Polly, b. Oct. 10, 1784. Archibald Stinson, senior, died July 3, 1824, aged 85. His wife died Monday, Dec. 11, 1838. The following was written by a friend soon after the death of Mr. Stinson:

“Died at his residence in Dunbarton, after a distressing illness, July 3, 1824, Mr. Archibald Stinson, aged 85 years. He was among the first and most enterprising settlers of that town, and for a number of years past a member of the Congregational church in that place, and to all appearance a true believer and firm supporter of the Cross of Christ. He expired with the fullest confidence in the hope of a blessed immortality. He was a firm and undeviating patriot; but although living in the days of the glorious struggle for American Independence, a fractured limb disqualified him for the duties of the field. He contributed largely and willingly to the support of that contest; and the war-worn veteran in the service of the Republic ever found a home and asylum under his roof, and his door was ever open to the helpless poor. He was unassuming in his manners, and modest without servility. He was ardent in his attachments and warm in his affections; ever ready to incommode himself to oblige a friend. In his death an aged widow whom he has left will lament the loss of a kind and affectionate husband; his children that of an indulgent parent; his connections and numerous friends a warm-hearted, benevolent fellow-citizen and friend."

JOHN STINSON, jr., son of the preceding, related the following wolf story. When a boy he was sent with a young sister, from his home near the meeting-house, to carry their dinner to his father and workmen, then making hay in a meadow more than a mile distant. The dinner basket contained, among other matters, a quarter of roasted lamb.

While following a path through the woods on the hill, a half mile south-east of the present residence of J. C. Ray, Esq., they were met by a wolf, which halted in the path directly in their front. The children, upon this apparition of an enemy disposed to dispute their "right of way," placed the basket on the ground, and retreated slowly backward, keeping "their faces to the foe."

The wolf advanced, and when they had seen him commence his dinner (probably the first cooked meal he had ever tasted), they fled home, raised an alarm, a turn-out of hunters ensued, and a large wolf was slain in the course of the day.

Mr. Stinson afterwards received from his father the farm and meadow to which he was conveying the dinner as before mentioned. The land contained several noble groves of rock maples, of which several hundred were tapped annually, which sometimes produced two flour barrels of sugar.

Of this annual product he sold but a small portion. Of the remainder, not required for his family's consumption, he made liberal donations upon all applicants. His generosity in this and in many other respects rendered him a popular favorite, particularly with the "young plants of grace" in his vicinity. He said he wished "to gain the good will of the children, for they would remember him in his old age."

We have not yet heard of one of them who did not kindly remember his generosity to them in youth. In the prime of his life he was one of the most active men of this region in all farming operations—particularly as a hay-maker and reaper. He died April 7, 1858, aged 82. Mrs. Stinson is still living in comfortable health for a person 86 years of age.

We have heard Mr. Stinson relate the following anecdotes of his adventures in the olden time :

While on his way to market with a load of produce, he put up for the night at a tavern a few miles north of Boston. In the evening a party of young gentlemen and ladies from town came to the same inn for a frolic and dance. The entrance door of the dancing hall having a window, Mr. Stinson thought he was doing no harm in looking through it at the performance. He was observed by the company, one of whom took from a table, covered with decanters and glasses, one of the former and threw it at his head. The window and bottle were broken, and the visage of the spectator slightly wounded. Amid the shouts of merriment elicited from the party by what they considered a capital joke, the injured person retired, muttering to himself that he would "be even with them." He proceeded to the stable-yard and took out the linchpins of the chaise wheels. The dancers departed at a late hour. On his way to town next morning our friend saw a few of the results of his experiment; no persons, however, were injured.

At one of the election shows at Concord many years ago, a person exhibited, among other matters, in a temporary shanty, two large live rattle-snakes in a box covered with glass. A party of Dunbarton and Weare men, full of fun and mischief, all being stout, athletic persons, proposed to Mr. Stinson, who particularly hated the serpent race, to kill them, assuring him that they would cover his retreat, and accordingly disposed of themselves in such positions as to effect their object.

As he approached the box, with his hands each containing a stone, concealed under his coat skirts, his partisans called to others to "make room for him, for he knew all about snakes," and room was accordingly made. The reptiles were coiled together, and with the exclamation, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head," he discharged both stones through the glass, breaking both of their backs. A sharp scuffle ensued, but the vigor and activity of his backers enabled him to retreat without much difficulty.

While on his way from a store with refreshment for his hay-makers, in crossing a pasture, he was chased by a cross bull, and took refuge in an old apple tree, where he was blockaded until a party of friends, summoned by his shouts, appeared with clubs and drove away the animal.

The tree, of which we have often tasted the fruit, leaned towards the ground so far that a person could easily run up the trunk. It was planted by Samuel Stinson, the first owner of the lot, in 1752 or 1753, uncle of the individual who, in the instance above stated, was perhaps indebted for his life to its protecting branches.

The parent tree fell two years ago, but a sprout from the root produces similar apples. It was called the "old sweet apple tree," and near it, of the same age, stood the "old sour apple tree." A few rods north of their position are the remains of Samuel Stinson's cellar. They are situated upon lot No. 13, 2d range, now owned by the heirs of Major C. Stark.

JEREMIAH STINSON, Esq., son of Archibald, before named, graduated at Dartmouth college; read law; opened an office in Dunbarton, and married a daughter of the Rev. Walter Harris. He was several years town-clerk and a member of several important committees employed by the town.

His death was occasioned by sliding down from his hay-mow and coming in contact with a pitchfork-handle concealed in the hay, which, he being quite corpulent, entered his body nearly eleven inches. After lingering a few days in great distress, he died Sept. 28, 1809, aged 60 years. His widow afterward became the wife of William Green, then a trader in town, and afterward cashier of the Pemigewasset Bank at Plymouth.

William Stinson, elder brother of the foregoing, was a farmer, and resided many years upon his father's homestead. The farm is now the freehold of Mr. William Caldwell. Mr. Stinson was born May 25, 1772, and died March, 1847, aged 75 years.

JAMES STINSON, brother of Archibald, senior, whose name often occurs in the early records as connected with public affairs, was an ingenious man, and an industrious farmer. We remember him well, as "uncle Jamie," his familiar cognomen. His language distinctly indicated his North British descent, from the land of Wallace, Bruce, and the "bonny Dundee." He was wont to complain of persons for stealing his "good chough white oak timmer." He lived and died upon the land where he first pitched his tent and established his abode. He was born March 21, 1745, and died April 5, 1827, in the 83d year of his age. His wife was Janette Allison, daughter of Samuel Allison, who died Dec. 10, 1843, aged 92, and survived her husband sixteen years.

His son JOHN, many years a town officer, and colonel of the ninth regiment N. H. militia, now occupies the farm of his father. He is a public spirited, liberal minded, intelligent man.

Children of James and Janette Stinson: William S., b. Oct. 6, 1783; Mary, b. Nov. 30, 1785; Samuel, b. Sept. 17, 1787; John, b. Nov. 13, 1789; Archibald, b. March 14, 1791; James, jr., b. July 20, 1794; Jeremiah Page, b. July 20, 1798.

Capt. JONATHAN BURBANK was an officer of the Rangers, and killed in a skirmish in 1759, during the French war.

We are not certain that he was a resident of this town, but infer the fact from the following receipt:

“STARKSTOWN, 1st August, 1758. Then received of Capt. John Stark eighty-one pounds, eighteen shillings, New-York currency, being the money that was delivered to me by Capt. Shephard for the use of Capt. Burbank.

RUTH BURBANK.”

STEPHEN BURBANK, we presume a son of the above, was a well-known carpenter, and died in this town nearly fifty years ago.

The money mentioned in the foregoing receipt was intended for the recruiting service of the Ranger corps. This was just before the time Capt. John Stark came home from the army on furlough, at which time he married Elizabeth Page.

SAMUEL STINSON, brother of Capt. William Stinson, was the first person of the early settlers who died a natural death in this town, and his remains were the first deposited in the central grave-yard. As we have been informed, his grave is near the hearse-house, although no inscribed stone denotes the spot.

He owned and died upon lot No. thirteen, in the second range. The property descended to his son John, who, during the Revolution, joined the British army, and his estate was confiscated. He, after the war, returned and died at New-London. He was blind in one eye, and was familiarly known as “one-eyed Johnny.”

JOHN STINSON, brother of Samuel, above named, owned lot No. twelve, in the second range. He and his son went over to the enemy during the Revolution, and the farm was confiscated.

REV. WALTER HARRIS.

“Dr. Harris was born in Lebanon, Connecticut, June 8th, 1761. His parents were Nathaniel and Grace Harris, who had two sons and three daughters. The subject of this discourse was the youngest child of his parents, and was born shortly after the death of his father. The name of his only brother was Nathaniel, who was two years older than himself. From about the time of his birth till the death of his mother, which occurred in the sixteenth year of his age, the family consisted of only three persons—the mother and her two sons—provision having been elsewhere made for the daughters.

“Dr. Harris, a short time before his death, mentioned some circumstances which, as connected with the religious character and habits of a beloved parent, he recollected with the tenderest emotion. His mother was pious, and her house was a little sanctuary, in which she regularly maintained the worship of God. The manner in which she performed this duty was truly affecting. After reading a portion of the Scripture, she took each of her little sons by the hand, and in this position of her entire household, offered her fervent prayers to Him of whom it is written, ‘a father of the fatherless, and judge of the widow is God in his holy habitation.’

“To a cold hearted sceptic, this would probably seem unworthy of notice, but not so to those who, like our departed father and friend, believe that God directs to important results all the circumstances of our lives.

“By the death of the mother, the two sons were left in the sixteenth and eighteenth years, respectively, of their ages, without parent or guardian, and with only a pittance of worldly substance. Their situation was now afflictive, and, for a short time, they were in suspense in relation to the choice of their future course.”—Rev. Mr. Bradford's Discourse.

Circumstances originating in the troubled situation of their country soon disposed of that question. The campaign of 1777 had commenced. The most gloomy and doubtful period of the revolutionary contest had arrived, the events of which were destined to decide, in favor of the revolted colonies, the cause for which they had appealed to the God of armies.

Energetic exhortations, setting forth the dangers and distress of the country, were addressed to the people from the halls of legislation, as well as pronounced from the pulpit, in almost every hamlet throughout the land, urgently calling for volunteers to fill the ranks of the continental army, in anticipation of the approaching fearful crisis.

With other young patriots, the Harris brothers responded to the appeal of their country, and in May, 1777, became soldiers. Nathaniel Harris (while, in that year, acting as an aid to Gen. Brigham, of Vermont, so says the legend of his family), was killed by a cannon ball, when the British attacked Mud Fort,* near Philadelphia. If we understood him correctly, Mr. Harris informed us that he was at his brother's side when he fell, at the battle of Brandywine, in 1777. The subject of this notice passed uninjured through three years of service, although several times exposed to danger, and received, in 1780, an honorable discharge. He returned to peaceful life, uncontaminated by the licentious examples and customs which usually abound in camps, as in all other positions in military service. Soon after leaving the army he purchased a lot of land at Lebanon, in the vicinity of Dartmouth College. The tract was nearly in a state of nature. This he intended to clear, and convert into a flourishing farm. During the severe winter of 1780-81, with an axe on his shoulder, he commenced his solitary journey on foot for the scene of his intended operations. He was then nineteen years of age.

In due time he reached his place of destination, and engaged in the task he had undertaken. There he toiled for a time in felling trees, but the slow progress which attended his simple exertions induced a sudden "change to come over the spirit of his dream," and an opinion to be generated as speedily in his mind, that he could render himself a more useful member of society in some different occupation from that which he had so recently commenced.

He foresaw the difficulties he was liable to encounter in procuring means to support himself while acquiring an education, dependent as he was solely upon his own efforts, with no wealthy or influential friends to assist him by aid of funds and counsel. These, with other circumstances and considerations in connection, were discussed aloud, while he sat alone in the forest, upon the tree he had last felled. There, soliloquizing within hearing of no other human ear than his own, he argued, by proposition and answer, the subject in which he had become so deeply interested. The case was in a short time summed up, and in a louder tone than he had used during his monologue, the verdict was declared in these words: "I will go to college." Suiting the action to the words, he stuck his axe into the fallen tree, leaving it there as a prize to the finder, and departed to prepare for the execution of his determined resolve.

He graduated with reputation at Dartmouth College, in 1787, and studied divinity under the direction of Dr. Emmons, an eminent scholar and divine, at Franklin, Mass., where he probably became acquainted with Miss Fisher, whom he afterward married.

October 30, 1788. A committee from the town of Dunbarton engaged Mr. Harris to preach for a year, or a shorter term, upon probation; and on the 26th of August, 1789, he was ordained as pastor of the church in that town. He soon afterward took possession of the valuable lot of land set apart by the proprietors to become the property, in fee simple, of the first settled minister, upon which he became an exemplary practical farmer. His land was well cultivated and abundantly productive.

One season, when few people in this part of the country raised corn suitable to plant, he raised a fine crop, and sold seed corn for four dollars per bushel. Economy and neatness were leading characteristics of his agricultural operations.*

The ministry of Mr. Harris was eminently successful. He gathered and kept united a numerous church, and his society was large, considering the limited sphere of his exertions, over whom he exercised a powerful influence, which indeed extended generally throughout the town.

He possessed much natural talent, a prominent-featured, strongly marked, grave and thoughtful countenance; a person dignified and commanding, with corresponding manners. His presence was sufficient to command and preserve order in public assemblies, even when the passions of the people were excited by political or other interests. His pulpit oratory was fervent and impressive, his voice powerful, and his language unadorned by rhetorical flourish, was distinct, bold and effective.

“A man severe he was, and stern to view.”

He was a good husband; kind in his domestic circle, firm in his friendship, of undoubted integrity, and resolute in the performance of what he considered his duty. He was endowed with shrewdness, address, self-possession, and courage. Thrown into active life amid the troubled scenes of revolutionary strife, the two latter characteristics would naturally acquire strength and stability from his early service in the war-fields of that eventful drama.

When the eulogy upon the Marquis de la Fayette was delivered before the legislature, by Hon. Nathaniel G.

*He allowed no poor walls and fences to stand upon his farm, nor weeds to over-top the corn in his fields. When, during his rides, he observed any of these indications of bad husbandry, he advised the owners to abate the nuisance. The zeal exhibited in his rural occupations, and the good husbandry manifested in the appearance of his own farm, house, barn, and outbuildings, contributed much toward establishing the influence he possessed over the dwellers in this agricultural town.

Dr. Harris published several sermons, one of which, on the subject of “False Teachers,” delivered in Dunbarton in 1811, we have in possession.

Upham, in 1835, Dr. Harris, the "veteran of Brandywine," sat in the pulpit of the "old north church," at Concord, beside the orator; who, in the course of his address, alluded to his "venerable friend" as having been present in arms at the battle of Brandywine, where that illustrious friend of the United States received his first wound in the cause of liberty.

Dr. Harris was respected through life, and retired from his labors at a patriarchal age. During the latter portion of his ministry he was assisted by the Rev. John M. Putnam as a colleague, for a short time, when he retired entirely from his pastoral connection with the church, and Mr. Putnam became his successor. Mr. Harris died Dec. 25, 1843, aged 82 years, 6 months, and 17 days. He was thrice married, and in each instance his selection was very fortunate. His first consort was Jemima Fisher, daughter of Nathaniel Fisher, of Franklin, Mass., born April 13, 1770; who was the mother of his children, and a superior woman. She died March 12, 1815, in the 45th year of her age. His second was Elizabeth E. Cleveland, born Sept. 5, 1767; died Jan. 20, 1830, aged 62 years, 4 months, 15 days. His third wife was Jane Aiken, born Feb. 12, 1776.

The children of Walter and Jemima Harris were: Clarissa, b. June 17, 1790; d. April 18, 1817, aged 26 y., 10 mo., 1 day; Jemima, b. Feb. 12, 1792; d. April 15, 1811, aged 19 y., 2 mo., 3 days; Mary, b. Feb. 4, 1794; d. Nov. —, 1856, aged 62 y., 10 mo.; Nathaniel Fisher, b. May 12, 1797; d. May 3, 1844, aged 46 y., 11 mo., 22 days; Elijah Lyman, b. Nov. 18, 1798; d. March 17, 1854; Lewis F., b. May 16, 1801; Walter, b. Nov. 26, 1803. Lewis Fisher and Walter Harris, Jr., are now the only surviving children of the Rev. Walter Harris. The former is a merchant, residing at the South, and the latter in New-Jersey.

Elijah Lyman Harris received a good education, and commenced his career, at the age of seventeen, as a clerk in the store of William Green. He was afterward a traveler, seaman, soldier and teacher. His adventures by sea and land, in different portions of the United States, the southern Atlantic coast of the same, the West-Indies, the Spanish Main, the Gulf of Mexico, and the South Pacific seas, are recorded in a journal written by himself, for a period of about forty years, which is now in the possession of his family. It contains much interesting matter, and is well written. He was accidentally drowned at Maysville, Kentucky, in the Ohio river, March 16-17, 1854. The following communication from a coroner describes the circumstances of his death. It was directed to his niece, Miss Lizzie Tenney, whose letter, found in his trunk, informed him of the residence of his friends :

MAYSVILLE, March 26, 1854.

Dear Miss :—I held an inquest on the 17th instant on the body of a man, from papers found in his trunk, to be of the name of Elijah L. Harris. He was a passenger who came down the river on the steamer "Falls City," just before day, and a few minutes after was drowned off the wharf boat. On going to the "Goddard House," and missing his baggage, he returned to the wharf-boat to seek for it. It is supposed that the glare of the moon on the water deceived him, and he stepped overboard.

The three large fingers of his left hand are off.* His papers show him to be a pensioner. His money ($47.17), out of which were paid the expenses of a decent burial, his trunk and carpet-bag, with their contents ($23.50), you will please write what to do with them.

Yours respectfully,

CARTER BELL.

Miss Lizzie Tenney.

Since writing the foregoing notice of Dr. Harris, we have received a communication, which we insert in the writer's own words:

* While a party of his regiment were practicing at targets, Mr. Harris, being in the front rank, this accident was caused by a mistake of the man in his rear, who, as he fired, instead of stepping one foot to the right, stepped one foot back, by which movement his bullet carried away the fingers of Mr. Harris. This circumstance secured him a life pension of three dollars per month.

“Rev. Walter Harris was born at Lebanon, Connecticut, June 8, 1761. He was grandson of Walter Harris, of Connecticut, and son of Nathaniel Harris, of the same place, who died in 1751. His only brother, Nathaniel, was killed by a cannon shot, while the enemy were attacking Mud Fort (Red Bank) near Philadelphia. He acted as aid to Gen. Brigham, who was afterward Lieut. Governor of Vermont. Dr. Harris was a fellow soldier with his brother, and witnessed his death.

“While in the army, near Newport, his commander made a retreat from the British (who had made their appearance on the hill), by sending the troops and baggage all day across the river in sight of the enemy. These retreating troops passed up the river into the woods, and by this means regained their camp—a ruse of our general to blind the enemy, causing them to suppose the troops were gathering for battle next day, when our soldiers were next morning safe in their camp, thirty miles distant. This masterly effort and brilliant achievement of our general was in consequence of the neglect or refusal of Count de Estainge, the French Admiral, to support us in the conflict unless he could be commanding officer of the day.*

“Dr. Harris was bold, as became a soldier of the cross; scarcely inferior to Dr. Emmons in clearness, discrimination, argumentation, and, as a close disciplinarian, ever valiant for the truth. In the pulpit he used short notes, holding in his hand a small bible, to which he turned for references. His gestures were prompted by the nature of his subject; his tones clear and penetrating. Often, when preaching a doctrinal discourse, he rose to a pitch of sublime and subduing eloquence. The conversion of sinners to God was the great aim of his ministry. His old age was serene—his death peaceful, happy, triumphant.”

* The above probably alludes to the siege of Newport, Rhode-Island, in 1778, where, instead of remaining to support General Sullivan, Count de Estainge sailed from his position at Newport, to engage the British fleet; in consequence of which Sullivan was compelled to retreat to the main land. Mr. Harris was, during his latter years, an honorable pensioner of the United States.

Dr. Harris possessed a vein of dry humor, which occasionally manifested itself, notwithstanding his generally grave demeanor. An old Concord friend related the following instance :

In the early days of our State government it was customary for all clergymen, who saw fit, to attend the meeting of the Legislature, and they were allowed by that body a dinner with the person appointed to deliver the election sermon. The dinner at the time to which we allude was at the house of Deacon John Kimball, where Governor Langdon had his quarters.

The Rev. Mr. ——— was well known as “a good trencher man.” He consumed more food at a meal than would satisfy the appetites of two ordinary persons. He had his plate heaped on this occasion with salmon and other accompaniments, until it could hold no more.

Dr. Harris, who sat next him, called to Mrs. Kimball, saying: “Do be so good, Mrs. K., as to furnish brother ——— with another plate, for he has no room on the one before him to begin to eat his dinner.”

The remark called forth many smiles from the guests, as the good lady ordered him an extra plate.

MAJOR JOHN MILLS, son of Thomas Mills, was born January 7, 1756. He was a soldier at Bunker's Hill, and probably engaged in other actions of the Revolutionary war.

In all his transactions he was known as a plain-dealing, honest, and upright man. He attained the rank of major (N. H. M.), and filled for years offices of trust and honor. He was moderator four times, representative eight years, selectman twenty-two years, and treasurer thirty-five years, besides being appointed upon many important committees.

He was generally respected, and performed well the part assigned him in the scene of existence where Providence placed him.

His son, JOHN MILLS, Jr., Esq., was a town officer and representative. He removed to Michigan in 1835-6, where he died. The Mills family were staunch old-fashioned Federalists.*

Children of Major John and Margaret Mills: John Mills, Jr., b. November 6, 1786; Thomas, b. September 21, 1788; Polly, b. September 24, 1790; Peggy, b. September 15, 1792; James, b. September 4, 1794 (died January 28, 1805); Betsey, b. December 20, 1795; William, b. March 30, 1798; Thankful, b. July 11, 1800.

THOMAS, father of Major John Mills and others of the name, died November 21, 1795, aged 70.

Lieut. THOMAS MILLS, son of Thomas, above named, born January 7, 1761, was a volunteer at Bennington, where he was detained several weeks after the action, to attend upon the wounded men.

He stated that the night after the battle the prisoners (wounded included) were shut up in a meeting-house, around which sentinels were posted. During the night several of them, attempting to escape, were fired upon by the guard. Mr. Mills died November 5, 1848, in the 88th year of his age.

The children of Thomas and Mary Mills were: Betsey, b. January 3, 1789; Peggy, b. May 16, 1791; Tamar, b. December 6, 1792; Sally, b. January 2, 1795; Thomas, b. May 7, 1798; Thankful, b. June 17, 1800; Ruth, b. July 9, 1802; Emily, b. April 15, 1805.

CALEB MILLS, brother of the foregoing, was a wealthy farmer. His youngest son, CALEB MILLS, Jr., was educated at Dartmouth College. He is now a clergyman and a professor of Wabash College, Indiana.

PETER MILLS, brother of Caleb Mills, senior, settled at Zanesville, Ohio, where he died a few years ago, leaving a considerable estate acquired by traffic in Revolutionary Army lands. He was once employed by John Jacob Astor in the fur trade, and in that capacity traveled much in Canada and the far Northwest. He left no children. He was born September 25, 1769.

Family Record of Caleb Mills: John, b. December 30, 1786; Sarah, b. October 20, 1793; Nancy, b. May 4, 1797; Polly, b. March 14, 1800; Elizabeth, b. July 15, 1803; Caleb Mills, Jr., and Fanny Mills, b. July 18, 1806. Caleb Mills, senior, was born June 8, 1765, and died January 8, 1834.

WILLIAM BEARD, born June 4, 1758, was a soldier of the Revolution at the age of sixteen, and served in the Canada campaign in 1775; also at Ticonderoga in 1776-7.

He related, as an anecdote, that in the vicinity of that fortress was a fine spring of clear, cool water, near which hard fighting had taken place in the attack of 1758. The soldiers there found a human skull, which they cleansed and used for a drinking cup.

He was a man of large stature, a good farmer and an extensive cultivator of hops. He died August 10, 1838, in the 81st year of his age. In 1811 his name is recorded as a tythingman, as follows:

“Tythingmen chose. 1. Lieut. Thomas Mills. 2. William Beard; do refuse to take the oath. 3. Major William Brown.”

Mr. Beard served in several town offices, and was a firm Jeffersonian Republican. His children were two daughters: Rachel, born Feb. 16, 1789, and Mary E., born March 16, 1791. Rachel was married to Moses Marshall and Mary to James Stone.

Both of Mr. Beard's sons-in-law have ever been considered “good men and true.” Mr. Marshall has been dead some years, but Mr. Stone is now living. He is a worthy example of a good farmer, and a firm supporter of republican institutions, as are all his sons.

On his [Mr. Beard's] grave-stone are the words, "A soldier of the Revolution."

JOHN BUNTEN was an early inhabitant of this town, and often employed in public affairs. According to the following record he was blessed with a numerous progeny. He died March 26, 1833, aged 76.

John and Elsie Bunten's children: Robert, b. August 5, 1777; Mary, b. August 30, 1779; Sarah, b. August 9, 1781; John, b. August 7, 1783; Samuel, b. September 25, 1785; Andrew, b. September 12, 1787; Elsie, b. January 23, 1790; Anne, b. December 15, 1792; Burnham, b. February 26, 1795; Jenny, born February 6, 1797; James, b. August 29, 1799.

The name of JOHN FULTON occurs several times in the proprietors' records and in those of the town, as a public officer. He became an inhabitant at an early date. His children were: Elizabeth, b. March 15, 1774; Samuel, b. May 22, 1776; Robert, b. November, 22, 1778; John, born February 9, 1781; Janette, b. February 22, 1783.

JOSEPH PUTNEY AND JAMES ROGERS.

Joseph Putney and James Rogers were the first settlers of Dunbarton. The time of their settlement is not known, but we are induced, from several circumstances, to suppose it to have been made several years prior to 1746.

Hunting, in the infancy of our country, was the most profitable employment of its inhabitants. While engaged in an expedition of this character, Putney and Rogers discovered the "Great Meadow" in this town, then covered with a luxuriant growth of natural grass.

The apparent facilities there afforded for procuring fodder for cattle induced the hunters to regard this as a desirable situation for a permanent location. They accordingly erected log houses, and removed their families from their former abodes in Londonderry, through an almost unbroken wilderness, to their new homes. Bow was probably at that time without an inhabitant, and Rumford (Concord), the nearest settlement.

The only access to that town was by the rude footpath which these hardy foresters themselves formed through the woods, spotting the trees as they advanced. No nearer than Concord were to be found stores for traffic, mills, schools, or places of worship. None of the privileges they had formerly enjoyed followed them to their lonely retreat. Their dependence for subsistence and comfort was upon the improvements which their industry alone could accomplish, of the rude, but, in many respects, bountiful materials which nature offered them. The forest furnished occupation for their axes; their wild occupants of beast and fowl, and the fish of the streams, offered abundant opportunities for proving their skill in the use of the musket, trap, hook or spear, to procure for themselves the enjoyment of sportsmen, and provision for their families.

In their isolated position, braced with firm nerves, good health, and determined resolution, they struggled onward, clearing land, rearing stock, and planting orchards, until 1746, when a body of hostile Indians appeared in the Merrimack valley, to destroy the property of the settlements, and slay, or "capture" the inhabitants.

Two persons from a Concord garrison, well knowing the defenceless condition of the two families in Dunbarton woods, proceeded thither in the night, to notify them of their danger; and in the course of the same night the families of Rogers and Putney returned with them to the garrison at Rumford.

Rogers and Putney returned the next day for their cattle. The ruins of their still smoking dwellings, their slaughtered cattle lying scattered around, their fruit trees destroyed, the result of laborious years thus rendered of no avail, told them that the remorseless savage had been there.

Who cannot sympathize with these worthy parents, or imagine their feelings when returning to the garrison to inform their anxious relatives and friends that their all had, within a few hours, been laid waste by the hands of their ruthless invaders. One subject of consolation was theirs—the timely warning of friends had preserved their lives.

MISS MARY CLARK, of Concord, a lady of talent and literary acquirements, whose residence was a short distance from the Bradley monument, composed a ballad in the antique style, which was read or sung at the ceremonial of erecting the same, from which we extract the following :

“ The fierce Canadians (Frenchmen they),
 Had set the Indians on :
 ’Twas sad to see for many a day,
 The mischief that was done.
 Houses were burnt and cattle slain,
 And smiling fields laid waste—
 To seek the lurking foe was vain—
 His steps might not be traced ;
 For the dark, trackless woods concealed
 Him ; issuing whence, he seized
 The unwary laborer in the field,
 A captive, if he pleased.”

* * * * *

“ A hundred Indians, near about,
 Blood-thirsty, fierce and strong,
 Seen, now and then, in straying scout,
 As they had passed along,—
 In August, ’46, came down
 Direct from Canada,
 Bent to destroy the embryo town,
 If in their course it lay :
 Yet did the people not forget
 The holy Sabbath day :
 In their log meeting-house they met,
 To hear, and praise, and pray.
 Each carrying his gun, went in,
 For fear what might betide,
 And parson Walker there was seen
 With musket by his side.

* * * * *

“ But, oh ! the morrow came ; and then
 In Penacook was seen
 Such slaughter of their bravest men,
 As never yet had been.”

Rogers and Putney remained at Rumford until the depredations of the enemy had ceased in that vicinity. During the time of his residence there, Putney, while at work upon the interval, was fired upon by a party of Indians and his arm broken. He escaped, and the ball which occasioned his wound was preserved in the family, until, by a thoughtless boy, without the knowledge of his elder relatives, it was melted for some childish purpose.

When the community became more tranquil, and fears of Indian depredation had subsided, in 1749, Putney and Rogers rebuilt their log houses, and removed their families to their former homes.

A few years afterward, while Rogers was driving cattle a distance back into the woods for feed, being dressed in clothing of bear's skin, he was observed by a person engaged in running lines, who, supposing that a bear was before him, fired with fatal effect at the object in view. Rogers survived the wound but a few hours.

Joseph Putney passed the remainder of his life in the place hallowed by so many exciting events, where he died at an advanced age. At the house of his son, Henry Putney, were for several years held the meetings of the towns of Dunbarton and Bow, while classed for the choice of a Representative to the General Court. David Putney, son of Henry, before named, resided on the same premises, and died a few years ago.

His son Henry, now the only one of the name, as head of a family, residing in Dunbarton, is of the fourth generation from Joseph Putney. He has been elected to all the offices of importance in town; has been two years representative to the Legislature; was a delegate to the Convention for amending the Constitution of New-Hampshire, and has the last and present year been elected chairman of the board of selectmen. David Putney, his brother, has been for several years an officer and representative of the town of Bow.

For the information contained in the foregoing statement we are indebted to Henry Putney, Esq.

No family record of Joseph Putney or his son Henry appearing upon the town books, we insert that of David Putney and his wife, Rebecca.

Children : Molly, b. March 23, 1791 ; Rebecca Sawyer, b. July 10, 1793 ; Adna, b. July 10, 1796 ; Fanny, b. February 27, 1799 ; David, b. Sept. 6, 1801 ; Fanny, b. September 22, 1805 ; Henry, b. June 11, 1807 ; Louisa, b. December 5, 1810.

As Mr. Asa Putney was an early settler in town, we here insert his family record :

The children of Asa Putney : James Putney, b. December 21, 1756 ; Hannah, b. April 14, 1758 ; Phebe, b. October 5, 1759 ; Jeremiah, b. April 7, 1761 ; Rachel, b. September 4, 1762 ; Abigail, b. October 12, 1764 ; Asa, Jr., b. Nov. 12, 1776 ; Sarah Putney, b. January 19, 1769 ; Joseph, b. May 9, 1771 ; Molly and Joseph, b. May 22, 1773 ; Martha Putney, b. Sept. 3, 1775 ; Susy, b. April 20, 1778.

THOMAS HUSE, mentioned in the proprietors' records, was quite an important personage in the early days of the town. He was among the first grantees, in 1752. His family record is as follows :

Sarah Huse, b. Nov. 4, 1778 ; Seth, b. June 30, 1782 ; Betty, b. August 4, 1784 ; James, b. August 10, 1786 ; Thomas, Jr., b. July 30, 1788 ; Hannah, b. November 11, 1790 ; Lydia, b. February 19, 1793 ; Anna, b. March 2, 1795 ; Cyrene, b. November 13, 1798 ; Seth, 2d, b. June 5, 1802.

CAPT. WILLIAM PARKER, from Bradford, Mass., was for many years a man of note in this town. He located himself on the Page road, where he established a tannery, and carried on, for the times, a large business. In company with his brother Phinehas, he established a store at the central village, near the meeting-house. He was a prominent leader of the Federal party in this place, and was a man of business as well as intelligence. He died in 1815, generally respected. His children were all respectable and well educated. Three of his daughters married clergymen. His daughter Anne is the wife of the Rev. Mr. Bird, who was a missionary to Palestine, and for several years stationed at Beyroot. She was there enabled to acquire information in respect to that highly interesting portion of the eastern world, from actual observation.

His sons were Leonard, (drowned while young, near Raymond's mill) William, Daniel H. and Leonard, 2d. Daniel H. now resides on the homestead of Major John Mills, whose daughter was his first wife. He is a good farmer, deacon of the church, has been several years, and is at present, a town-officer, as well as a respected citizen.

EBENEZER WOODBURY, an old inhabitant of this town, was born in 1762, and died in 1853, aged 91 years. He voted at the Presidential election in 1852 for Pierce electors. We conversed with him at that time, and, if our recollection is correct, he stated that he had voted at every Presidential and at every Annual election since his 21st year. He once owned the mills now possessed by Ebenezer P. Kimball. He said he had lived "through ninety cold winters." Children of Ebenezer and Hannah Woodbury: David, b. May 10, 1785; Ebenezer, b. April 11, 1788; Jonathan, b. January 1, 1790; Hannah, b. January 23, 1792; John, b. February 10, 1794; Polly, b. July 29, 1798; Gardner, b. September 9, 1800.

Hazadiah and Anna Woodbury's children: Anna, b. August 15, 1817; Ira, b. January 20, 1820; Lyman, b. June —, 1825; Jane, b. February 27, 1828.

CAPT. MOSES CARR was a person well known to the elderly inhabitants of this place. He was tall in person, possessed great strength, and was a hard working farmer, as also, in his younger days, a successful hunter; when valuable game, such as beavers, otters and other animals, the fur of which commanded high prices, were plenty. He owned more than seventy-five traps ; was an excellent marksman, as well as fisherman. He worked as "foreman of the crop" for twenty-three years on the farm of Major Stark. With the accumulated wages of his day labors, and the profits of his attention to his traps at night, (for his strong constitution enabled him to turn night and day to profit) he settled, in 1811, upon one of his farms obtained by mortgage, with an estate of six thousand dollars—a great property at that period for a farmer. He died in 1838, at an advanced age.

The daughter of Moses Carr was married to Robert Chase, Jr., who, after her decease, sold the farm to Capt. Nathan Gutterson.

JOHN CHURCH came to this town as a protégé of "Master Robert Hogg," among the first settlers. We have understood that his name was derived from the circumstance of his being found at the door of a church, as an abandoned infant. He was located, by Mr. Hogg's aid, upon lot No. 18, in the first range, in the north-western part of the town. He was an economical farmer, was selectman, collector, constable, and a deacon of the church. He was first called John Hogg and afterwards John Church.

He divided his farm with his son-in-law, James George. He afterwards incurred much trouble and expense on account of an insane daughter, so that in his old age, when past labor, his expenses consumed the value of his estate, and he was forced to apply to the town for assistance. It was a pitiable sight to witness, as we did, the arrival of a man of his respectability at the town farm. He died there Dec. 27, 1842, aged 97. He and Mrs. Joseph Leach (102) were the oldest persons who ever died in this town.

CAPT. JOHN DUKE is a native of France. He sailed while young to the East Indies on board a French vessel.

He came from the East to Salem in an American vessel. Afterwards he made several voyages as an officer on board vessels belonging to the Messrs. Gardner, of Salem. He brought with him to Dunbarton a considerable amount of property about 1813-14. He is now living in good health, which he has thus far enjoyed during his life. His age is more than 80, and his memory has failed.

MR. JOB ROWELL was born in Goffstown, Feb. 24, 1771. His father and grandfather came to that town from Salisbury, Mass., in 1760, and settled on the Benjamin Blaisdell farm, now owned by Jacob A. Flanders. His grandfather died in 1768. His father moved to Derryfield in 1777. There Mr. Rowell occupied the farm of his father, holding for a time a commission in the New-Hampshire militia, and being also elected to several town offices. He was a Democrat and a Universalist.

In 1837, he purchased the farm of Robert Chase, in Dunbarton, where he resided until his death, July 12, 1848. His second wife was the widow of Robert Dinsmore, and daughter of the late Daniel Jameson, Esq. After Mr. Rowell's decease she became the wife of Capt. Oliver Bailey, whom she survives.

Leonard Rowell, Esq., son of the above, is a magistrate, and has for several years held the offices of town-clerk and selectman.

JOHN HOGG (or Hoog), and Samuel, his elder brother, from Hampstead, of Scottish descent, were among those to whom lands were assigned at the proprietors' meeting, held at Londonderry on Monday, March 7, 1752. Robert Hogg, probably their cousin, became an inhabitant of the township afterwards. He was chosen chairman of the board of selectmen at the first meeting held under the charter, Sept. 3, 1765. He was called "Master Hogg." John was a leading man in the settlement, and held many important offices in early times. After residing upon it several years he sold a considerable portion of his Dunbarton estate to Mr. Robert Alexander, of Bedford, and removed to a large tract of timber land which he had purchased, on Piscataquog river, in Weare, where he made a permanent location, and erected mills. He also purchased a large tract of wild land in Thornton. He was an active man of business, a good scholar for the time, and became wealthy. By the authority of a legislative act he assumed the name of Raymond. His estate in Weare is still possessed by his descendants. He was born October 29, 1739, and died in 1803, aged 64 years.

The following is a copy of the record, made in the hand writing of his father, in the old family bible, printed in 1734. The writer was a good penman :

“My own birth and marriage; the names and ages of my children.

I, myself, born September, Anno Domini 1704. I was married to Elizabeth Hambleton, Nov. 6, 1729.

My son, Samuel Hoog, born August 13, 1730; my daughter, Elizabeth Hoog, born April 29, 1732; my daughter, Agnes Hoog, born Sept. 2, 1734; my daughter, Anne Hoog, born July 4, 1736; my son, John Hoog, born October 29, 1739; my daughter, Mary Hoog, born May 7, 1742; my son, David Hoog, born March 5, 1745; my son, Abasser Hoog, born May —; my son, Caleb Hoog, born Nov. ye 22, 17—.

John Hogg and Agnes Hogg married Feb. 19, 1767. Age of their children :

Jean Hogg was born Jan. 21, 1768; John Hogg was born June 17, 1770; Sarah Hogg was born May 6, 1773; Thomas Hogg was born July 8, 1775; Caleb Hogg was born August 8, 1779; Jeremiah Paige Hogg was born March 17, 1785.”

The names of the above were by act of the legislature exchanged for that of Raymond.

CALEB RAYMOND, third son of John, senior, was an officer of the U. S. Navy. He was on board the frigate Constitution, in the West Indies, in 1799, when that ship, for the first time, failed to overhail the antagonist she pursued. She came in sight of the French frigate "La Insurgente," of 54 guns, on the 8th of Feb., 1799, and chased her throughout the day. Her officers (with one exception), and the noble frigate herself (if her mind could be judged by her after achievements), were eager for the contest. Her commander, however, apprehensive of a tornado, so common in the West India seas, ordered the sails to be reduced, and the French frigate escaped in the night. From another work we quote the following: "The only events of this war (that against France, 1799, 1800), were the two brilliant victories obtained over the French frigates 'Insurgente' (Feb. 9, 1799), and 'Vengeance' (Feb. 1, 1800), by the U. S. frigate Constellation, rated at 36 guns, while her antagonist's mounted more than fifty guns each. For the capture of the former, which escaped the Constitution, the merchants of Lloyd's Coffee House Insurance Company presented Commodore Thomas Truxton a silver pitcher, with an appropriate inscription, and Congress voted him a gold medal for his triumph over the 'Vengeance.'" The pitcher we have seen in the possession of his daughter, Mrs. Sarah Benbridge, of Cincinnati, Ohio.

Lieut. THOMAS STICKNEY was once a prominent personage in town. He came here as an agent and farmer for John White, Esq., of Haverhill, who owned large tracts of land in this vicinity. He (Stickney) resided many years on the farm now owned by Nathan and William W. Gutterson. In his old age he became blind, and was supported by the town. His children were Thomas and Nancy.

Lieut. Stickney was a good horseman, and very much disposed to trading horses; swapping being then the term used in speaking of such traffic in common parlance. He came once to a store in his vicinity, where he usually found a party of kindred spirits, mounted upon a fine horse, whose good points he exhibited to the company as he rode about the ground near the store, and boasted of his good qualities. One of the company, Ebenezer Chase, observed, "You have a good horse, 'Uncle Stickney;' but I will bet a dollar Joe Healey can jump up behind you three times before you can ride to the corner" (a distance of fifteen rods). "I'll stand it," said Stickney. The bet money was placed in the hands of Col. Robert Holmes. Stickney dismounted and proceeded to a willow tree a few rods distance, and cut a switch, six feet long, which he trimmed out, and then remounted his horse. At the word to start, he drove his spur-rowels into the flanks of the horse and rode forward, swinging in rapid exercise behind him his long switch. The parties laughed so much at the turn of the joke, that the bet was almost lost. Just in time to save it, Joseph Healey stepped into the road, and jumped up three times. Stickney returned, claiming the money, but was told by the umpire that he had lost, for Joe Healey had jumped up behind him three times before he reached the corner. He swore roundly at what he called a cheat, but the matter was ended by applying the money in a general treat to all present.

Most people in his time used ardent spirits. He did not, however, desire the quantities he purchased to appear upon his store accounts, to be commented upon by his wife, and directed, after settling an account containing many such entries, that in future his grog charges should be set down as tea. When his account for next year exhibited such charges as, "a pint of tea," "a gallon of tea," &c., he declared his wife never purchased so much tea in all her life. He was reminded of his injunction of the preceding year, acknowledged the bill, and liberally treated the company, who were amused at a joke so well carried out.

THOMAS HAMMOND, from Newburyport, was an ingenious pump-maker. He laid down the first aqueducts in town. In one of them, on our farm, for a distance of fifteen rods, the pine sapling logs are sound, and the water of the well-spring flows through them. They were laid by him more than forty-two years ago.* His grandson, Samuel B. Hammond, was once colonel of the ninth regiment N. H. Militia. He has also been selectman and moderator.

Thomas Hammond's children: Jonathan, b. at Newburyport, Oct. 5, 1794; Esther, b. at Rowley, June 23, 1776; John, b. at Rowley, Oct. 18, 1777; Thomas, Jr., b. Feb. 22, 1780; Nathan, b. Sept. 26, 1781; Susannah, b. July 20, 1783; Huldah, b. July 1, 1785; Phebe, b. March 31, 1788; Mary, b. March 21, 1790; Nathaniel, b. March 4, 1792; Timothy, b. Aug. 27, 1797. Thomas Hammond, senior, died June 8, 1827, aged 80 years.

STEPHEN PALMER for many years had charge of the first saw-mill erected in town, by Gen. Stark (1760). He died at a great age. His son, Simeon, an excellent carpenter, rebuilt the Stark mills in 1810, and had charge of them until his removal to Unadilla, New-York, where he died a few years ago, at a good old age.

PERLEY P. RAY, and his brother AARON, were both superior workmen as coopers. For a time, a large portion of the casks required by the Boston liquor dealers and fish-packers were made by them. They were both patriotic, public-spirited, honest men.

JOEL WHEELER was one of those who refused to pay the minister tax, and was in consequence carried to jail. He was a thrifty farmer and accumulated a good estate. We observed, when once engaged in taking the town inventory, that he appeared proud of his handsome stock of cattle, and was desirous that they should be appraised at their full value. His son, Nathaniel H. Wheeler, now occupies the land cultivated by his industrious father. He has served several times as selectman, and twice been elected to the legislature.

* Mr. Hammond once proposed to General Stark to replace in his mill-pond, by some hydraulic contrivance, all the water which passed through the gates to turn the wheels of his mill, and thus compel the water constantly to perform its work. The General replied that if such a project was possible, "he had no desire to make a slave of the water."

JONATHAN IRELAND, Esq., came to this town more than forty years ago. He was a blacksmith, but carried on a large farm; was a superior agriculturist, and a man of intelligence. His son Jonathan now occupies his recent homestead. Mr. Ireland was born at Salem, Mass., and died December 29, 1854, aged 84 years and 7 months.

ROBERT and EBENEZER CHASE, sons of Colonel Samuel Chase, of Litchfield, settled in this town several years prior to 1800. Robert was a hard-working man and good farmer. His large family of sons and daughters, as they came upon the stage of action, with great industry assisted his exertions. He sold his farm, in 1836, to Mr. Job Rowell. His family all made out well. One of his sons, Thomas, is reputed a wealthy citizen of Nashua. Mr. Robert Chase held several town offices. He died in 1839.

EBENEZER CHASE, brother of the foregoing, settled here more than sixty years ago. He covenanted with Samuel Stewart to carry on the farm of the latter, for one half of the annual produce, during the joint and several lives of Stewart and his wife, after whose decease the land was to become his own, or that of his heirs. He established in the vicinity a blacksmith's shop, and conducted an extensive business in window-springs, locks, hammers and edge tools, beside performing the custom work of the surrounding inhabitants. His wife was a daughter of Captain John Parker, of revolutionary memory. He was well-informed, good-humored, and hospitable. He possessed a fund of anecdotes to amuse his customers. In those days stores, mills and smith shops were the principal depôts of news and country gossip. His house has been the scene of many a country ball, and we have no doubt the participators therein enjoyed as much pleasure as falls to the lot of Terpsicore's votaries in the more fashionable saloons of modern times.

Mr. Chase was several times appointed to town offices and committees. He died September 21, 1831, aged 68 years. His sons were all ingenious machinists. John is probably the ablest projecting engineer for manufacturing establishments in New-England. In that capacity he has been employed in all sections of our country. He has acquired a fortune by his own abilities and exertions, and resides at Chicopee, Mass. The Stewart farm now belongs to John C. Ray, grandson of Mr. Chase. He has been several years one of the selectmen, and twice returned to the Legislature.

Mr. Chase at the age of eighteen was a volunteer in the New-Hampshire brigade, at West Point, in 1780, and a few weeks before his death related to the writer the following incidents relative to General Arnold, who in that year deserted the cause of his country. Mr. Chase, with other soldiers not on duty, was on the shore of the Hudson when the desertion took place. When General Washington assigned to Arnold the command of West Point, he left his own barge, for his convenience in visiting the fortress from his headquarters, at Robinson's farm. A temporary hut had been erected near the river bank, for the accommodation of the four oarsmen who managed the boat. On the morning of his flight Arnold rode down to the shore very fast, as was his usual manner of riding, threw the reins to his attending orderly, and ordered the barge to be manned. He directed the men to steer for West Point, but on reaching the middle of the river the boat was observed to turn its course down stream, and move very swiftly through the water. The matter was explained by the returning boatmen. He hoisted a flag of truce, and ordered them to pull for the Vulture, sloop-of-war, then lying at anchor below, saying something of negotiating an exchange of prisoners, and promised, if they would row him down to her as soon as possible, to reward each of them with a guinea and a gallon of rum. When they arrived under the guns of the Vulture he disclosed his design, saying: "I have served the ungrateful scoundrels long enough;" and declared to the men that if they would go over with him they should have double pay and the rank of sergeants. One of them observed that "he did not understand fighting on both sides;" to which his comrades signified their assent. "Then," said Arnold, "you are prisoners of war." He ascended the deck, and was received by the marines with presented arms. He ordered the oarsmen to come on board, and they obeyed. One of them said, "it was a shabby trick, after they had toiled to the utmost of their strength to get the boat along, to refuse the promised reward and make them prisoners to boot." The English captain heard their murmurs, and stepping forward observed: "General, I command this ship, and, while I walk the quarter deck, no such transaction shall take place." Addressing the men he said, "My good fellows, I respect your fidelity to your country, although you are enemies to your king. You are at liberty to go or stay, as you please. Here," taking them from his purse, "are your guineas. Steward! put up four gallons of rum for these men." The boatmen thanked the generous sailor, and returned to report their adventure to General Washington, who had just arrived in camp. Arnold, in rage and chagrin, retired, without a word, to the cabin.

After his discharge from service, Mr. Chase, with his knapsack, canteen and cartridge box (his private property), upon his person, in company with several militia men, started for home, on foot, from West Point. Some cause of delay detained Chase a short time behind the others, and while he was hurrying on to overtake his party, then out of sight, he passed in the road two soldiers of the Continental Army. The troops of the line generally considered the militia as their inferiors, and seldom allowed an opportunity to insult and ridicule them to pass unimproved. One of the two, in this instance, said to his comrade, as Chase passed them: "That is a likely youngster—I wonder if he has got any spunk." "Pull his ears," replied the other, "and we shall find out." Chase, upon hearing this, seized his cartridge box belt with both hands, and moved on slowly. He heard the footsteps of the man advancing behind him, to execute his intended practical joke. When he judged the soldier was sufficiently near for effect, his cartridge box was suddenly swung round with such force, that the blow received by the man behind him, on the side of his head, felled him senseless to the ground. Thinking he had killed him, Chase fled to overtake his friends, to whom he did not dare to mention the circumstance; nor did he ever tell of it, until many years afterward, when a witness at Amherst court. While with a company, sitting around an evening fire in a tavern bar-room, relating stories, he told his adventure. A man sitting near him, whom he had known several years, exclaimed, "Was that you, Chase? Well, it took me several days to get over the effects of that blow; but I learned a good lesson—never to meddle with a stranger who did not offer to meddle with me. I'll stand treat for the whole company."

Ebenezer Chase died September 21, 1831, aged 68. Agnes, his wife, died February 18, 1839, aged 77. Their children were: Nancy, b. Dec. 1, 1786; John, b. August, 1788; Samuel Stewart, died an infant, 1790; Polly and Esther, b. May 14, 1792; Sabra, b. March 17, 1794; Hannah, b. Jan. 9, 1796; Simeon, b. Oct. 18, 1798; male infant, died without a name; Calvin, b. Feb. 7, 1802.

Several families named Perkins were formerly considerable people in this town, but, with their descendants, have mostly disappeared. A similar observation will apply to many others whose names appear in the early records. The names of Colby, Emerson, Annis, Elliot, Hadley, Wheeler, Ordway, Worthly, and others, are of frequent and familiar occurrence in the south-eastern part of the town.

In that quarter, John Page owns the third or fourth mill erected in this town. His son, John Page, Jr., resides on the farm of the late Rev. Walter Harris.

WILLIAM SMITH occupied land in the valley, nearly a mile south-east of the meeting-house. His children, Archibald and Sarah, are still living.

CAPTAIN DAVID MCGREGORE occupied for several years lot No. 14, in the second range, which passed from him to S. Palmer, and has since been owned by Messrs. Straw, Copp, Smith, Cilley, and Baker, the present occupant.

DAVID STORY, Esq., from Ipswich, Mass., (son of David Story, of that place), was well known in the early affairs of this town as a person of probity and respectable abilities. He for several years represented the classed towns of Bow and Dunbarton, and was the first representative elected by the latter town in a separate capacity. He filled several other offices, and faithfully discharged his duty in them all. He was seventeen times moderator, eleven years town-clerk, six years a selectman, and six times elected representative. He died March 20, 1834, aged 88. His son Warren was also engaged in public life as representative, selectman, and colonel of the ninth regiment New-Hampshire Militia. He was, in the prime of life, unfortunately killed by the kick of a horse. One of his sons, David, now worthily occupies the estate of his father and grandfather. Another son, Dr. Abraham, resides in Weare. The youngest son, La Fayette Story, has for several years been a resident of California. Abraham B., son of David Story, senior, was educated at Dartmouth College, and settled as an attorney-at-law at Washington, N. H.

ALEXANDER GILCHRIST, from Goffstown, was a good farmer, and an upright, obliging man, who died respected by all who knew him. He purchased the farm of John Stinson, 2d, where he resided until his death. The farm is now the property of Israel Straw, who is an industrious farmer, as well as a liberal-minded citizen.

TRISTRAM BARNARD served in the ranger corps, and was an officer of the Revolution. His grandsons, Reuben and Isaac Barnard, were both hard-working, industrious, honest men.

DOCTOR SAMUEL FLAGG.

Most persons of middle age in this vicinity may recollect that eccentric itinerant physician, Dr. Samuel Flagg, who, although not a native of Dunbarton, selected that, and several adjacent towns, for the principal scenes of his peregrinations for many years, through which he traveled on foot, with his pilgrim staff in his hand, and a small pair of saddle-bags, containing his stock of medicine, slung upon his shoulders. He had acquired a good English education, and a tolerable knowledge of Latin. He studied for a time with an eminent physician of Salem, Mass.

His father intended that he should become a tailor, but his disdain for the occupation, the inattentive manner in which he received his instructions, and the careless indifference with which he executed them, soon procured his discharge as an unprofitable apprentice. He wrote a ditty upon the occasion of his return from the shop bench, of which we remember two lines :

“ Samuel Flagg was such a blade
He would not learn the tailor's trade.”

He was not a surgeon, but an excellent practitioner in cases of wounds, chronic diseases, ulcers, fever sores, fevers, and other complaints common in every community. His remedies and applications were generally of a simple nature ; although he was well acquainted with the action of the most powerful medicines. Of these he occasionally made use, but with prudence and skill. He prepared various ointments and salves, of which roots and herbs were ingredients. The success attending their application was well known in the region over which he wandered. Had he left behind him recipes for all his prescriptions and appliances, we believe they would have proved of more value to the community than all the patent commodities which have been crowded upon public credulity since the establishment of the United States Patent Office.

His habits, in the latter portion of his life, were somewhat intemperate, yet he was generally received with kindness and hospitality wherever he came. If treated otherwise, his memory was tenacious of the affront, and no entreaties, until due reparation was made, could induce him again to relieve by his skill the members of any family from which he had received cause of offence. While under the influence of liquor he would never prescribe for a patient, but could easily be persuaded to lie down and sleep a few hours, when he would recover his equanimity and attend to the case. Those who were able and so disposed paid him for his services, almost as they pleased. His demands were very moderate, compared with the overgrown bills made up by the medical riders of the present steam-driven era. His food and lodgings were free, his clothing was sometimes furnished as gifts from friends, and a little cash sufficed to supply his saddle-bags with medicine. The poor repaid his attentions with thanks and blessings.

Our first distinct recollection of Dr. Flagg was on the day of the great eclipse, in 1806, when we were by him led by the hand as a child, to Stark's mill pond. The phenomenon occurred while we remained there, and is the earliest prominent event in our memory.

The Doctor once went to Hanover, to visit Dr. Nathan Smith, already become celebrated as a surgeon and physician, by whom he was kindly received. They conversed upon professional subjects, and Dr. Smith afterwards spoke of him as a person well versed in medical science.

The society of Shakers, at Enfield, wished him to reside with them as their permanent physician. He spent several winters with them. In the winter or spring of 1817-18 he was found dead by the road side between their villages. He was supposed to be 77 years of age.

JAMES McCALLEY, a well known agent in promoting the progress of this town, died January 24, 1812, aged 66. His son James was a worthy man, and an undeviating democratic republican.

Children of James McCalley, Sen.: Mary, b. July 20, 1777; Alexander, b. January 27, 1782; Thomas, b. July 29, 1784; Charles, b. November 25, 1786; James, b. November 30, 1790; Hugh, b. August 29, 1798.

DANIEL KIMBALL, once the proprietor of Woodbury's, or Kimball's mills, died August 3, 1825, at an advanced age.

SAMUEL STEWART brought with him to this place a very considerable property. In 1775 he was chosen town treasurer, being the first elected under the charter; the selectmen having, prior to that, performed the duties of that office. He was succeeded by James Clement, in 1781. He conveyed his farm, conditionally, to Ebenezer Chase, reserving one half of the produce during the joint and several lives of himself and his wife, Agnes. The latter survived Mr. Chase. She died in 1835-6, aged 93.

While making a line fence, with other persons, Stewart observed a large bear passing a cleared place near them, and gave chase in advance of the others, crying out that he would "draw the first blood and have the bear." He came up behind the animal, and struck his axe into his back. The animal turned backward, and grasped Stewart in his rough embrace, whom he hugged and severely wounded. As closely locked together, the "unloving couple" rolled down a small declivity in front. The party coming up despatched the bear, and conveyed Stewart, with his prize, home upon a sled.

Mr. Stewart was, at times, generous and obliging; at others, a perfect savage. He owned a fine lot of cherry trees, several of which he carefully watched until the fruit was perfectly ripe, when all in the vicinity were invited to the feast. His land being contiguous to that of John Hogg, Esq., (afterwards Raymond) the two proprietors were constantly at war. Their disputes were often carried to court, and high words and violence generally attended their meetings. At the funeral of Mr. Raymond, Stewart took a position near a door, fronting the coffin of his former antagonist, where, during the service, he stood nodding his head, looking steadily at the coffin. In the course of a fortnight afterward he was borne to his own long home, in the same burial ground. He died in 1803, aged 68 years.

He employed upon his farm three youths, whom, by fear, threats, and other influences, he compelled to swear to any story he should dictate to them, that might enable him to avoid legal punishment for his many acts of malice and violence. By these means he triumphed over Raymond in every legal contest whatever. Mr. William Leach, one of his boys, when he became of age gave a deposition which eventually restored Raymond to his rights at law, and enabled him to recover all he had lost by false testimony.

THE BURNHAM FAMILY.

A stone in the central cemetery of Dunbarton bears the following inscription :

“ Mrs. Hannah Burnham
Died March 1, 1805 ;
Relict of Lieut. Nathan Burnham, of Ipswich, Massachusetts, who fell at the defeat of the British army at Ticonderoga, A. D. 1758.”

From an examination of several papers now in the possession of John Burnham, Esq., of this town, we infer that his great-grandfather, Nathan Burnham, was an independent husbandman, a man of intelligence and capacity, who possessed the confidence of his fellow-citizens, as also that of the provincial government. By the former he was intrusted with the management of important transactions, and by the latter appointed to a military office, upon equal rank with officers of the same grade in the line of the English army. His wife was Hannah Choate, of Ipswich.

On the thirteenth day of March, 1758, he was commissioned by Governor Pownall first lieutenant of a company of foot, commanded by Captain Stephen Whipple, in the regiment of Col. Stephen Bagley, which constituted a portion of the force furnished by Massachusetts for the expedition against Canada. Lieutenants Burnham and Low, of the same company, fell in the fatal attack upon Ticonderoga, July 8, 1758, where an army of sixteen thousand British and Provincial troops were shamefully repulsed by one fourth of their number of French and Indians, through the incapacity of their general. Sixteen hundred and eight regulars and three hundred and thirty-four provincials, killed and wounded, was a cruel penalty for General Abercrombie's rash attempt to carry by assault a strong position, without bringing up his artillery, of which he had a good supply.

Among the papers in Mr. John Burnham's possession are Governor Pownall's proclamation calling for volunteers from the provincial regiments, Lieut. Burnham's commission, beating orders, forms of enlistment, orders to muster, words of command for the musket drill, order for the march, power-of-attorney to Lieut. B.'s wife to manage affairs during his absence on duty, a kind letter to her while on the march, and, lastly, the letter of a friendly comrade from the battle-field, narrating the melancholy fate of her dearest friend—a fate which it has been the sad fortune of widows to hear since the time when man became the murderer of his brother man.

Yet shall memory mourn the day,
 When, with expectation pale,
 Of her soldier far away,
 The poor widow hears the tale.

In imagination wild,
 She shall wander o'er this plain,
 Rave, and bid her orphan child
 Seek his sire among the slain.

Gashed with honorable scars,
 Low in glory's lap they lie;
 Though they fell like stars,
 Streaming splendor through the sky.

From the dust their laurels bloom,
 High they shoot and flourish free;
 Glory's temple is the tomb!
 Death is immortality!

MONTGOMERY.

HADLEY, June 7, 1758.

TO MY DEARLY BELOVED WIFE:

I hope, through Divine goodness, you are in health, as I am at this time, and I pray God be with you, and preserve you and our dear children from all evil. My duty to mother Choate. My love to all my friends. We came into town last Sabbath day, about two o'clock, and billeted the company at private houses, and we are very kindly entertained at the widow Porter's. Her husband was a member of the General Court about thirty years. Yesterday the Captain, I, and Lieut. Low, went over Connecticut river to Northampton, to see about the affair, and returned at night. We expect to go over to Northampton to-morrow, to take seven days' provisions, to march near to Albany.

I remain your loving husband,

NATHAN BURNHAM.

P. S.—I should be glad to hear from you. I have had blisters on one foot, but they are better. Col. Bagley came to town yesterday. Col. Dooty's regiment is coming in, and it is supposed both regiments are to march together. We have twelve of our own guns, and had twenty-two at Worcester, and other companies are much so. It is supposed there is no great danger. The arms are at Albany.

Directed, "To Nathan Burnham, of Chebacco, in Ipswich."

MRS. BURNHAM: I send you these lines to let you know the heavy news that you have to hear from the camp, and I pray God give you grace and strength to hold up under such heavy tidings. The truth is, your husband, our lieutenant, Nathan Burnham, being in the fight at the narrows of Ticonderoga, July the 8th, 1758, received a ball in the bowels, which proved mortal. He came to me and told me that he was wounded, and that he should soon be in eternity. I desired him to retreat down the hill. I followed him, and found some help to carry him off the ground, namely, James Andrews, John Foster and Jeremiah Burnham. We carried him that night four miles to our boats. The doctor did what he could, but vain was the help of man. Next day, being the ninth day upon our passage up the lake, about eleven o'clock, after many heavenly expressions and prayers, he departed this life, and, I believe, made a good exchange. Please tell Mrs. Low the same heavy news. Stephen Low, being in the same fight, was, without doubt, shot dead on the spot. We had not the opportunity to bring off our dead.

NEHEMIAH BURNHAM.

Lieutenant Burnham desired me to take care of some things that he had with him, which I will do in the best manner I can. Our Capt. Whipple is wounded in his left thigh. I hope he will soon be about again.

ASA BURNHAM, one of the children of the preceding, born in Ipswich in 1753, probably removed to this town with his widowed mother several years prior to the Revolution. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Cutler, who, ninety-six years ago (about 1764), settled upon the farm now the residence of David Story; his daughter being then twelve years of age.

Inheriting property from his father, Mr. Burnham purchased a large farm, which he industriously cultivated, and became one of the most wealthy and respectable farmers in the vicinity. His name is first mentioned as selectman in 1789. He was, in 1790, collector, and often afterward elected to responsible offices and committees on town affairs. Possessing resolution and decision of character, he exercised an extensive influence over the inhabitants and affairs of this town. High spirited, liberal minded, and firm in his principles, he was honored by his political friends; while his integrity and distinctly avowed sentiments commanded the respect of his opponents. He was popular in the generation in which he lived, as is also his memory with all dwellers in his vicinage, who respect the principles nobly sustained by their republican forefather.

Mr. Burnham strenuously opposed the compulsory proceedings instituted against those who refused to pay the minister tax. His property, with that of other individuals, was distrained, and the tax levied, to be refunded, with cost, at a future day.

Mr. Burnham, with seven other individuals (before mentioned), voted for Jefferson electors in 1796, and he supported the Democratic Republican administrations of his country until his decease, January 27, 1831, aged 79 years.

Besides the foregoing, the records exhibit, among the early settlers of this town, four other heads of families named Burnham, viz: Abraham, John, Nathan and Samuel. Four sons of Samuel graduated at Dartmouth College. They were Samuel, John, Abraham and Amos Wood Burnham. Abraham was pastor of the church at Pembroke. Amos was the first preceptor of Pembroke Academy, and is now the settled clergyman of Rindge. Bradford Burnham, his brother, is a respectable and experienced farmer in this town. His son Abraham graduated at Dartmouth College. His sons, Henry L. and William B., have both held town offices creditably to themselves. The former is an experienced teacher, and also an expert surveyor. He has the present year been elected one of the three county commissioners.

Family Records.—Abraham Burnham and Mary Perkins were married February 11, 1762. Their children were: Betty, b. (at Hampstead) May 27, 1763; Hannah, b. August 26, 1765; Abraham, Jr., b. July 29, 1793.

Abraham Burnham is mentioned in the town record as one of the Committee of Safety, 1776. Nathaniel and Samuel, also, are recorded as town officers. The Burnham family came from Ipswich and its vicinity.

DANIEL JAMESON was the son of Hugh Jameson, whose name appears in the record as constable in 1767. He held other offices. The subject of this notice was born February 25, 1762. He was a person of much ability, as also capacity for business, and satisfactorily discharged the duties of several important stations, from 1787 until 1814. He was representative, town-clerk and selectman, holding the two latter offices at the time of his decease, in July, 1814. That he was a good scholar, penman, and man of business, the offices he at times held, and his records as town-clerk, afford ample testimony. He was elected selectman in 1787, and town-clerk in 1799, and for several years held both offices. He was elected representative in 1813. He died July 9, 1814, aged 52 years and 4 months. He was representative two years, selectman seven years, and town-clerk nine years.

* Capt. Nathan Burnham was the son of Lieut. Nathan Burnham, who was killed at Ticonderoga in 1758. He was a brother of Asa Burnham.

On account of his decease a special meeting was warned on the 18th of July, 1814, which assembled on the 3d of August, when John Gould was chosen clerk, and John Stinson selectman, to fill the vacancies occasioned by his death.

Family Record.—Daniel Jameson and Hannah Burnham were married October 7, 1788. Betsey Burnham Jameson, b. August 1, 1789; Peggy, b. March 17, 1791; died February 25, 1792; Abraham B., b. March 21, 1793; Daniel, b. April 29, 1795; Molly, b. October 20, 1796; Thankful Caldwell, b. July 26, 1798; Hannah, b. June 22, 1800; Jonas Hastings, b. May 25, 1804; Jemima Harris, b. November 19, 1806; Jane, b. October 30, 1808; Hugh, b. August 4, 1811.

SAMUEL KIMBALL is one of the best master carpenters in the vicinity, and a very intelligent, respectable man. His son CHARLES is now town-clerk, and we are under obligations to him for the free access he has afforded to the town records, in furtherance of our present undertaking.

JARED FULLER, lately deceased, was an ingenious blacksmith, as well as an esteemed townsman. He resided on the place formerly owned by Samuel Perkins.

Not far from Mr. Fuller once lived Dea. JOHN WILSON. If an honest man ever lived in this world, he was one. His descendants are also honest and upright people.

Children of John and Anna Wilson: Polly, b. July 29, 1796; John, b. February 24, 1799; Eliza, b. May 6, 1809; Abby, b. May 2, 1803; Thomas, b. October 19, 1805; Abel Kimball, b. Lieut. TIMOTHY LADD was a worthy man, but unfortunate in the circumstance of having several of his family deranged. He died March 16, 1808, aged 57. His children were: Polly, b. January 13, 1777 (at Windham); Heman, b. November 24, 1778 (at Windham); Rachel, b. June 9, 1780 (at Windham); John, b. August 9, 1783 (at Windham); Hannah, b. May 7, 1787; James, b. March 1, 1789; Bill Ladd, b. July 13, 1791; Fanny, b. May 27, 1795; Sally, b. June 7, 1797.

JAMES CLEMENT was one of the five surveyors of highways chosen at the first meeting held under the charter, September 3, 1765. In 1774 he was chosen town-clerk, and at different periods selectman, treasurer and representative. His son James practiced as a physician. Luther and Ephraim S., sons of the Doctor, are still residents of this town. The latter lost a son in the Mexican war.

Family Record.—James Clement, b. April y^e 2, 1737; Elizabeth Little, b. March y^e 1, 1744; married May 4, 1762. Children: Jonathan, b. March 13, 1763; died March 20, 1765; Thomas, b. JOHN HOLMES was chosen tythingman, the only one, at the first meeting held under the charter, and served afterward in other capacities. His son Charles became a wealthy merchant in Boston. Robert served in several town offices. He was in 1811 colonel of the ninth regiment N. H. Militia, and was a good officer. His son, Capt. Charles Holmes, now resides upon the homestead.

Record.—John Holmes and Mary McCalley married October 31, 1759. Children: William, b. (at Goffstown) July 28, 1760; Mary, b. June 17, 1762; Robert, b. March 5, 1766; Charles McCalley, b. August 30, 1767; Betty, b. April 15, 1769; John, b. November 8, 1771; Abram, b. May 15, 1772; Alexander, b. February 17, 1774; Peggy, b. January 4, 1776; Martha, b. November 24, 1777; Anna, b. November 24, 1777. John Holmes, senior, died May 1, 1804, aged 73. Col. Robert Holmes died February 28, 1850, in the 84th year of his age.

Capt. OLIVER BAILEY, son of Oliver Bailey, from England, was a shrewd, hard-working, mind-his-own-business sort of a man, who considered the cultivation of his acres, the care of his flocks, herds, and loans, of more importance than offices. He acquired a large estate, and died at the age of 82.

His son, OLIVER BAILEY, Jr., is a thriving farmer, and possessed of a handsome estate. He has, within two years, removed to Bow. His sons, Oliver and James, occupy his former estate in Dunbarton. They are enterprising men.* His son Mark was educated at Dartmouth, and is now professor of rhetoric at Yale College.

JOSIAH BAILEY, brother of the above, and also a farmer, died a few years ago. His children were two sons and one daughter. The latter is the wife of Henry L. Burnham, Esq. His sons were Ebenezer and Daniel. The former, a young man of much promise, one of the most ingenious and industrious of our townsmen, was struck down, in the morning of life, by one of those terrible accidents, which, since the introduction of railroads, are common occurrences in this country. In the disaster on the Boston and Maine Railroad, in which the only son of the President elect of the United States, with other individuals, lost their lives, Mr. Bailey was so severely injured that he survived but a short time. His enterprise, usefulness, and amiable qualities, caused his untimely fate to be deeply deplored by all who knew him.

* On their estate are still to be seen several cellars of the houses erected by the early settlers,—Putney, Rogers, and those who joined their settlement. On part of the ground they cleared a considerable forest of timber is now growing, and the apple-trees which were by them planted, after the year 1746, are also to be seen among the forest trees which have grown up since they were set there. One of the pines on the lot is three feet in diameter.

EZEKIEL and SAMUEL RYDER, sons of Ebenezer Ryder, have ever been considered thrifty farmers and respectable citizens. Ezekiel is still living. His son Charles has filled responsible offices in town. Another son is a respectable physician at Portsmouth, N. H.

Family Record.—Children of Ebenezer and Abigail Ryder: Polly, b. Dec. 10, 1776; Mary, b. March 21, 1778; John, b. Nov. 21, 1779; Hannah, b. June 9, 1782; Ezekiel, b. Feb. 25, 1785; Ebenezer, jr., b. Nov. 9, 1786; Jotham, b. Sept. 9, 1788; Isaiah, b. Oct. 25, 1790; Samuel, b. Sept. 16, 1792; Nabby, b. July 11, 1794; Thankful, b. April 15, 1796.

Mr. CHALLIS FITZ occupies and owns the farm on the Page road, once the property of John Leach. He is a worthy, industrious man, who attends to his own affairs without interfering with those of others, or troubling himself with that most unprofitable of all employments—office seeking—but is a man of firm principles and a good citizen.

GEORGE CUNNINGHAM, although a resident of Goffstown, was, with his wife, a member of Mr. Harris's church, and were, with several of their children, buried in the graveyard near Dunbarton "old meeting-house." The first stone in the yard, with an inscription, is to the youngest son of Mr. Cunningham, in 1794.

Family Record.—George Cunningham, b. June 11, 1738; d. Nov. 14, 1820, aged 82; Martha, his wife, b. July 14, 1740; d. June 16, 1830, aged 90. Children: Alexander, b. Oct. 31, 1763; d. Feb. 19, 1828, aged 65; James, b. Sept. 3, 1765; Robert McCalley, b. Feb. 21, 1768; d. Dec., 1811; George, jr., b. May 25, 1770; d. March, 1771; George, 3d, b. March 8, 1772; Anna, b. July 2, 1774; Mary, b. June 4, 1776; d. August 11, 1836, aged 59; Martha, b. March 15, 1779; d. March 30, 1854, aged 75; Betsey, b. Jan. 14, 1781; d. Jan. 25, 1786; Sarah, b. June 11, 1783; d. May 30, 1785; Samuel Foster, b. July 12, 1785; d. July 28, 1794.

DANIEL and JOHN McCURDY settled in the south-eastern part of the town as early as 1752, being among the first grantees. On the 17th of October the proprietors held their first public meeting in the township upon their land.

John McCurdy was a second lieutenant of rangers in Rogers' company, in 1756, when John Stark was first lieutenant in the same corps. He was a good soldier,—a man of character and resolution. After holding several other town offices he was chosen one of the Committee of Safety in 1775. His son was in the battle of Bennington.*

MATTHEW S. McCURDY, son of John, was frequently a town officer and deacon of the church. An accident happened to him while fishing at Amoskeag falls, in which he might truly ascribe his preservation to a special interposition of Providence. The plank upon which he stood gave way, and he was hurried down the whole extent of the falls. He was taken from the water senseless, and recovered with much exertion.

MR. DANIEL K. DAVIS now owns a portion of the McCurdy land. He is a respectable citizen, and although a recent resident in town, has been appointed several times to offices the duties of which have been creditably discharged.

Other names might be selected from the records of past years, deserving particular notice. By perusing the brief summary of the records herein contained, the descendants of the ancient occupants of this prosperous township may learn something of the parts they performed in the early days of its settlement.

MAJOR CALEB STARK was the eldest son of General John Stark, and born at Dunbarton December 3, 1759. At the age of fifteen and a half years, as a volunteer in the 1st

* Rogers, in his journal, November 4, 1775, states: To prevent this, I embarked with Lieutenant McCurdy, and fourteen men, in two boats, leaving the remainder of the party on shore under the command of Captain Putnam (afterward General Putnam.)

New-Hampshire regiment, he was present at the action of Bunker's Hill, and soon afterward an ensign in the company of Captain George Reid. He served with his regiment in Canada, and after the retreat from that province in 1776 was appointed adjutant, in which capacity he acted at Trenton and Princeton, as also in the actions of September 19th and the 7th of October. In the latter engagement he was wounded in the left arm. He was also at the battle of Springfield, in 1780. He afterward became brigade major and aide-de-camp to General Stark, under whose command he served until the end of the war. In 1778 and 1781, in addition to his other duties, he performed those of Adjutant-General of the Northern Department.

After the close of the war he engaged in merchandize at Haverhill, Massachusetts, at Dunbarton, and subsequently at Boston. In the course of his commercial pursuits he visited the West-Indies and England. When the war of 1812 commenced he closed his affairs at Boston, and directed his attention to manufacturing at Pembroke, New-Hampshire.

Having disposed of his Pembroke estate, in 1830, he proceeded to Ohio, to prosecute his family's claim to lands granted for their military services in the Revolution, which he recovered in 1837. He died on his estate in Ohio, August 26, 1838, in the 79th year of his age.

He possessed a strong memory, read much, and by perseverance supplied the deficiencies of early education. Schooled in the stormy strife of the Revolution, he was well versed in the political and military history of his country, with also a general knowledge of that of other nations. He was a man of energy and decision of character. His estate in Dunbarton is still possessed by his family. He opened the first store in this town at Page Corner, which he afterward removed to the Borough farm, where he continued in trade until 1806-7, when he commenced business in Boston. He held the office of town treasurer from 1788 until 1791.

He introduced the practice of grafting and budding fruit trees, in this region. With his own hands he set grafts and buds in his orchards, and those of his nearest townsmen who were sufficiently credulous to consider the strange experiment worth trying. In a few years a plentiful supply of superior fruit more than realized their expectations. He visited every section of Massachusetts where he heard of choice fruit, and obtained scions for his own trees.

He was the youngest survivor of the action of Bunker's Hill who appeared there when the corner stone of the monument was laid by the Marquis de la Fayette, in 1825 ; and one of the twelve Revolutionary veterans who stood by General Jackson when he took his first official oath as President of the United States, March 4, 1829.

In company with Isaac Riddle, Esq., of Piscataquog, he started the first freight boat which ascended the Merrimack river to that place. The boat was named "The Experiment," and its arrival created much sensation. A crowd of people assembled upon the occasion, and guns were fired, accompanied by other manifestations of astonishment and gratification on account of the success of "The Experiment."

Other particulars of the life of Major Stark may be found in a work containing a Memoir of General Stark and others, published by G. Parker Lyon, Esq., Concord : 1860.

TIMOTHY JOHNSON was an industrious farmer, a man of firm principles, and a respected member of the community. His son Thomas has served in several principal offices, and been three times returned to the Legislature. His son Henry now occupies the homestead. He is a spirited and worthy young man, as was also his brother Stephen, recently deceased.

NATHANIEL COLBY, son of Archelaus Colby, is a respectable, "well-to-do" farmer. He has several times been elected selectman, and in 1851 was returned to the Legislature.

SAMUEL ALLISON held offices of trust in former days.

JAMES ALLISON, his grandson, was many years a trader near the meeting-house. He was town-clerk as well as selectman several years, and twice elected representative.

SAMUEL ALLISON died August 27, 1800, aged 51. His children were: Janette, b. Dec. 9, 1770; (married to James Stinson); Samuel, b. June, 1768.

CAPT. BENJAMIN WHIPPLE was born at Hamilton, Mass., in 1785-6. He was formerly an excellent practical farmer, and president of the county agricultural society, from which his family and himself obtained several premiums, as acknowledgments of their industrial performances. He once commanded the cavalry, and was reputed a good officer. Having sold his well cultivated farm, he still resides in sight of it, enjoying a life of ease and comfort, as does also his brother SAMUEL, at Page Corner.

His brother JOHN was educated at Dartmouth College, and practiced law at Hooksett, afterwards at Contoocookville, and lastly at Concord, where he died, August 28, 1857. He had been Clerk of the Senate, Deputy-Secretary of State, Register of Deeds, and Judge of the Police Court at Concord.

THOMAS HOYT was a soldier of the Revolution. His children were Timothy, b. Nov. 8, 1763; Elizabeth, b. March 10, 1766; Eunice, b. August 20, 1768; Micah, b. March 21, 1772; Betsey, b. August 30, 1774.

HON. RICHARD H. AYER, a native of Concord, settled at Isle of Hooksett Falls, within the limits of this town, in 1807. Accounts of his career as a legislator, his widely extended influence, and moral worth as a member of the community at large, have been written by abler pens than ours. We are well acquainted with and duly appreciate his important public services in by-gone days. It is therefore only necessary here to notice briefly his connection with the affairs of this town. He was elected representative for the years 1810, 1811, 1812, 1814, 1815, 1816, 1817—seven years; moderator from 1812 to 1823—eleven years successively. He was induced to serve as selectman once (1821). He ably discharged his duty in all positions in which he was placed by the votes of this town. He was the principal agent in organizing the town of Hooksett and establishing the county of Merrimack. He was born at Concord, Jan. 12, 1778, and died at Manchester Feb. 5, 1853, aged 75 years and 23 days.

Offices held at different times by Hon. R. H. Ayer: Representative from Dunbarton 7 years; from Hooksett 4 years; Presidential Elector in 1816 and 1848; Councilor from 1817, five years in succession; Sheriff of Merrimack county from 1823 to 1828; Naval Store-keeper at Portsmouth from 1829 to 1837; Delegate to the Convention for amending the Constitution of New-Hampshire in 1850. His house was the abode of good cheer and hospitality. His wife—the daughter of Peter Green, Esq.—was a superior woman. A more particular notice of him may be found in the Farmers' Monthly Visitor.

SAMUEL LORD was a well known early inhabitant of this town, and died January, 1818, aged 65. One of his sons, Thomas, was a volunteer at Portsmouth during the war of 1812. Several grandsons of Samuel Lord are respectable farmers in Dunbarton.

CAPTAIN JOHN FERGUSON, a soldier of the Revolution, more than fifty years ago was a manufacturer of spinning-wheels, which were then to be found in every household where wool or flax could be obtained, before their inmates had become ashamed or unwilling to wear the products of their own industry, in their preference for foreign fabrics.

THOMAS CALDWELL came from Litchfield here. Several of his relatives were distillers, and located themselves at Newburyport, Mass. He became a wealthy farmer and was an honored townsman. His descendants are all respectable members of society. His grandson, David S. Caldwell, is now settled at Newbury, Mass., while another, William Caldwell, resides in Dunbarton. Thomas Caldwell died Feb. 20, 1816, aged 83.

Family Record.—Thomas Caldwell was married to Elizabeth Holmes, Nov. 1, 1759. Children: Mary, b. August 14, 1760; Alexander, b. August 15, 1761; Margaret, b. Feb. 18, 1763; William, b. July 17, 1764; Thomas, jr., b. May 3, 1766; Agnes, b. April 25, 1768; Elizabeth, b. Oct. 9, 1769. A daughter, b. July, 1771, died in twelve days. Agnes died June 7, 1770.

ISRAEL CLIFFORD settled at Page Corner in 1765. He was born in Kingston, N. H., in March, 1746, and died at Dunbarton, April 13, 1835, in the ninetieth year of his age. His house, and that of Capt. Page, were the first framed buildings erected in the vicinity of Page Corner. He voted for Jefferson electors in 1796. He was many years constable and collector. His son Jonathan, also one of the eight voters for Jefferson in 1796, has survived them all. He is now nearly eighty-five years old, having been born Sept. 23, 1775. His memory is clear, and he still supports the principles for which he voted in his youth. He was tax collector fourteen years.

PHINEHAS BAILEY was an early inhabitant, and acted some part in town affairs. He was, when in his prime, very expert in all farming operations, particularly in using the hoe. He once assisted Mr. Harris in planting. The latter undertook to drop the seed corn, while Mr. Bailey followed with his hoe to cover it. The latter, however, so closely pressed upon his steps, that when he had dropped out two rows, he said: "Mr. Bailey, I have almost broken my back. I must find a boy that can drop and keep out of your way." His son Charles was also an active farmer; a tall, strong man, and exerted much political influence. He was temperate, industrious, and his affairs unembarrassed—yet, strange to say, while in a state of mental despondency, he committed suicide.

Children of Phineas and Esther Bailey: Charles, b. December 16, 1803; Patty Currier, b. May 18, 1809; Polly, born December 19, 1811.

WILLIAM TENNEY, architect of the meeting-house and many other buildings now standing, was the ablest master carpenter in this region. His work was expeditiously and well performed. He married a daughter of Judge Page. He died October 22, 1838.

Their children were: Jeremiah Page, b. November 28, 1782; Nancy, b. May 16, 1784; Achsah, b. June 28, 1786; David, b. February 26, 1791; John P., b. October 13, 1795. His daughters married Messrs. John Leach and Samuel Whipple.

CAPTAIN NATHAN GUTTERSON has resided in this town more than thirty-two years. He had charge of the Stark mills from 1830 to 1856-7. Since that time they have been managed by his son John. Captain Gutterson is a man of much intelligence and business capacity. He has been several years one of the selectmen, representative twice, and ten times moderator. He and his son, William W., purchased the farm of Robert Chase, Jr., part of which is land that was, during the Revolution, confiscated as the property of John Stinson.

Lieut. JAMES HOGG erected a house on the place now owned by Barton Brown. His daughters were very well educated. After he left the place, Captain Joseph Leach resided there while his house was building, on the Page road. The house of Mr. Hogg was afterward owned by Perley P. Ray. It was burnt about 1830-1.

Mr. SAMUEL GUTTERSON, originally of Weare, but having for some twenty years been a resident of Lynn, came to Dunbarton in 1849. He is a worthy man, and in his family we have passed several pleasant winters.

Capt. SHUBAEL TENNEY was a pattern farmer and very respectable resident of this town. His farm is now wholly, or in part owned by Daniel H. Parker. His son, the Hon. John Tenney, graduated at Dartmouth College, read law with James H. Duncan, Esq., of Haverhill, Massachusetts, in which town he opened an office, and married a daughter of the Hon. Bailey Bartlett.

NATHANIEL T. SAFFORD, from Beverly, a few years since purchased the farm of Captain Benjamin Whipple, which he improves with good husbandry. He has been several years elected town clerk, and is a respectable and valued citizen.

Capt. JONAS HASTINGS carried on a tan-yard in the southerly part of the town.

Mr. PAUL HEALEY was an ancient settler. He died at the age of 93. His second wife died at the age of 92. His son Joseph was a good teamster as well as farmer. Himself, Robert Holmes and Josiah Bailey were, long before the date of railroads, a well known trio on the Boston road, as teamsters.

RICHARD CILLEY served a farmer's apprenticeship in this town, which he left in 1835. He has been several years a stage owner and driver; as also an express agent. Having by his industry acquired a comfortable property, he purchased a farm on our town's western border, where he enjoys quietly the avails of his activity and providence in early life.

ROBERT ALEXANDER removed from Bedford to this town. He purchased the Dunbarton farm of John Raymond, Esq., upon which he resided until his death, March 3, 1818, at the age of 93, when the farm was divided between his sons, David and William. The latter removed to the western part of New-York more than forty years ago. David was an exemplary husbandman and worthy citizen. He never sought office, and his affairs prospered. He was a good officer of militia, and deacon of the church. He led a reputable life and died respected, June —, 1852, aged 70. Mrs. Alexander died May 29, 1854.

Mr. HUGH JAMESON, son of late Daniel Jameson, Esq., married his daughter, and now owns the estate improved by Captain Alexander.

Children of David and Martha Cunningham Alexander: Betsey, b. February 28, 1805; Nancy, b. January 6, 1807; Polly, b. October 24, 1808; Harriet, b. November 22, 1812; Maria, b. December 25, 1815.

Major WILLIAM BROWN, from Beverly, Mass., settled in the south-eastern part of the town. He was an influential and respectable man, often elected to town offices, and major of the ninth regiment (New-Hampshire Militia).* When he came to this place he possessed but little property, but by his active labor as a good blacksmith, he purchased land, piece by piece, until he had obtained a considerable farm. He was, in his younger days, a hard worker. He left a good estate. He was born January 24, 1764, and died April 2, 1849, aged 85. His grandson, Paltiah, has frequently been chosen moderator and selectman. He was also elected Register of Deeds for Merrimack county, and now resides in Concord.

Major Brown's children were: William, b. May 30, 1790; Judith, b. September 19, 1794; Anna, Hannah, *ANECDOTE OF MAJOR BROWN. When he commanded the militia company in this town, while with them, on parade, near the town-house, he observed a large black snake with head erect, steering across the common, toward the house. Without a moment's hesitation he gave chase, and before the enemy could get under cover, killed him with his sword.

Paltiah, Serena. William Brown, Jr., died September —, 1849, aged 69.

JONATHAN WAITE was an ingenious blacksmith. He served the town as selectman, and was twice elected representative. In his decease his family as well as the public suffered a severe loss. His sons, George and James, carry on his establishment.

BENJAMIN TWISS was a substantial farmer, and resided on a lot adjoining that of Rev. Walter Harris. His son, J. P. Twiss, now occupies his farm.

BENJAMIN MARSHALL was born in this town on the old Perley place. His father dying soon after his birth, he was, while an infant, conveyed by his widowed mother to Ipswich, Mass., where she afterward married a Mr. Pearson. After reaching years of maturity Mr. Marshall returned to settle in Dunbarton. He became an experienced and independent agriculturist. He was once induced to serve as a selectman. One year's experience, however, convinced him that the position was not one to be desired, and that his well cultivated farm was an object more worthy of his attention. He left a handsome estate. He was born in 1775, and died February 25, 1858.

Dunbarton records contain the following: "January 8, 1802. Married Benjamin Marshall, of Ipswich, to Betsey Goodhue, of Dunbarton." Children: Eunice P., b. July 6, 1804; Elizabeth and Mary D., b. March 21, 1806; Sarah, b. January 6, 1808; Benjamin, b. December 12, 1809; Hannah, b. May 18, 1812; Lydia M., b. November 29, 1813; Harriet N., b. August 31, 1817; Enoch P., b. November 24, 1819; Charles H., b. March 11, 1823.

JOHN DODGE, once an inhabitant of this town, was collector in 1817. He published a pamphlet, addressed to Rev. Walter Harris, in defence of Universalism.

Children of James and Esther Morse: True Morse, b. February 26, 1799; Sally, b. January 22, 1801.

Capt. JOSEPH LEACH, a veteran soldier of the Revolution (also a sea captain), was a high-spirited, valued citizen, and a strong Jeffersonian republican. He was several years representative and selectman. His death (1815-16) was occasioned by the running away of his team in the hay season. While springing from his cart to stop his cattle, he was caught and crushed between the wheel and a bar post. His widow died June 20, 1849, aged one hundred and two years. His sons were Joseph, Samuel, John and Andrew. He had also several daughters.

BENJAMIN PERLEY, Jr., resided in the south-eastern part of the town. His sons, Warren and Humphrey C., within a few years deceased, each served the town several years as selectmen and representatives.

Children of Benjamin and Lois Perley: Lois, b. January 18, 1792; Patty Gould, b. June 28, 1793; Benjamin, b. February 15, 1795; Hannah, b. October 12, 1796; Humphrey C., b. March 31, 1798; Warren, b. September 3, 1799; Gilman, b. August 27, 1801; Eliza, b. December 22, 1802; Anna, b. November 26, 1804; John, b. July —, 1808; Elbridge, b. October 29, 1810.

When he was very old the house of Mr. Benjamin Perley, senior, caught fire. He went to the attic to extinguish it, and being unable to get out, perished in the flames. His great-grandson, Jeremiah, son of Warren Perley, was slain, after a brave defence, by a party of Indians in California.

ELIPHALET R. SARGENT, from Goffstown, who has resided in this town about twenty-five years, is an intelligent, industrious husbandman. He has held town offices of responsibility, and owns the farm first occupied by Capt. William Parker.

JOSHUA F. HOYT was a hard-working, thrifty farmer, and an extensive dealer in cattle. He was chosen selectman and treasurer several times. He was also an agent for the purchase of the town farm, agent for the surplus revenue, and representative. His son, Joseph G., graduated, with a high reputation for scholarship, at Yale College; was for a time tutor at Phillips Academy, Exeter, from which town he was chosen a delegate to the State convention for amending the Constitution. He is now chancellor of a literary seminary in Missouri. Benjamin, the youngest son of Mr. Hoyt, has been selectman, and in 1859 and 1860 was elected treasurer. He occupies his father's former residence, and is, like him, the cultivator of a considerable farm, as also an extensive dealer in cattle and lumber.

THOMAS TEWKSBURY owned a farm bordering upon Hopkinton, which he managed with great industry, economy and profit. He was a cooper, and in that capacity made several voyages to the West-Indies. He died at a very advanced age. None of his family now reside in town. His farm was lot No. 19, in the first range, originally laid out to John Quigg.

Children of Thomas and Anna Tewksbury: Anna, b. (at Manchester) January 18, 1786; Betsey, b. (at Manchester) November 14, 1787; Molly, b. May 23, 1791; Thomas and Jacob, b. September 16, 1792; William, b. April 3, 1795.

Captain JOHN GOULD was born at Hampton, Mass., in 1740. He was an efficient agent in the early affairs of the town, before and after the Revolution. In 1775 he was one of the "Committee of Safety." He died January 3, 1806. Mrs. Rachel Gould, his wife, born at Pittsfield, N. H., died October 10, 1809.

Hon. JOHN GOULD was born August 15, 1769, at Dunbarton (another account states August 15, 1767, at Amesbury, Mass). He was a man of much capacity for business, slow, sure and methodical, and held for many years every important position in which the votes of his townsmen could place him. He was also elected Senator for the 3d District, in 1820 and 1821. He belonged to the Republican party. Several years ago the Federalists carried all the offices in town except one. The one Democrat elected was John Gould. His opponents jocosely remarked that they had cleared out all the Democrats but "one old stump," and they would root him out next year. The time came round, and the Democrats reelected the "old stump," as also their whole ticket. Mr. Gould possessed sound judgment, and exerted a powerful influence over the town and its affairs. Being an excellent practical surveyor, he was well known throughout the county. He was a man of reading and reflection, as well as a fair scholar, considering the limited advantages within his reach. He studied men as well as books, and his active mind supplied many deficiencies in his common school education.

He published several pamphlets on the subject of Universalism. His eldest son, John, was educated at Dartmouth College, but did not live to graduate. His second son, Edward, was young when he first engaged in public affairs. He is a man of abilities, and has passed the round of all important town appointments; was selectman, treasurer, and twice returned to the Legislature. William C., his youngest son, now resides in Bow.

Children of John and Dorothy Gould: John, Jr., b. April 12, 1794; died September 6, 1815; Edward, b. August 15, 1796; Sally, b. December 17, 1797; Clymenia, b. January 16, 1806; Lewis, b. July 28, 1809; Lovina, b. August 25, 1813; John Harris, b. October 23, 1816; William C., b. June 2, 1820. Hon. John Gould died February 1, 1852.

A friend has furnished the following remarks, which we add to this notice in nearly the words of the writer:

"John Gould was born in Amesbury, Mass., August 15, 1767.* His father moved to Dunbarton when he was a mere boy of five or six years of age. He settled upon the farm where John Annis now lives. The site of the old house is but a few feet back of Annis' house. The place where he located himself was a wilderness. He struggled along in poverty, and raised a family of nine children—seven boys and two girls.

John Gould was the third child—one boy and two girls being his seniors in age. He served an apprenticeship with a blacksmith named Gwinn, in Derryfield, near the old Amoskeag bridge. He commenced work for himself at the age of 24, and bought an acre of land, upon the corner, across the wall, near Johnson's house. He erected a house where the shop now stands, and also a shop south of the barn, on the corner where his house had been erected. He married Dorothy Head, a poor servant girl, and moved into his new house, their effects being conveyed thither in a bushel basket.

His father was a very hard-working, industrious man, of good natural abilities, but possessed very little learning. He could read and write, but very indifferently. His mother could read and write better than her husband.

John Gould, their son, went to school but four weeks in his life. He said the first copy ever set for him was written by his mother on a piece of birch bark; yet I can say of him that he possessed the most thorough common English education of any man I ever knew: that is, in the branches generally taught in his day, which were reading, writing and arithmetic. I never saw him at fault in parsing or puzzled by a sum in arithmetic. Being much with him I frequently received his assistance in those particulars while myself acting as a teacher, and he invariably "helped me out when against a snag."

When a boy I attended a singing school at Dunbarton Centre, where the teacher proposed this question: "What will fill one third of a measure in common time?" He allowed his pupils until the next meeting to prepare an answer. I studied some time upon the question, and gave it up. Squire Gould, however, answered it in ten minutes, and with his information I went to school the next evening in good spirits. The answer was called for; and none could give it but myself. Our old friend — — called out, “ — — told you.” I did not own up at the time, but it was nevertheless true. This goes to show that although of different politics our friend duly appreciated his abilities.

His letter to Mr. Harris was an able production. I have looked over his writings in manuscript, to see if I could discover a misspelled word or an ungrammatical sentence. I have never discovered any, although hours have been expended in the search.

'Squire Gould was a self-made man. His knowledge was acquired from books and observation, without a teacher, or such text books as you and I have had the privilege of perusing. Dilworth's Spelling Book, the Psalter, Pike's Arithmetic, and Alexander's Grammar, were the principal works at his command. He was singular in his boyhood. He seldom mingled with other boys in their sports, but preferred retiring by himself with his book for his companion.

He did not, however, deny himself all sports and recreations, for he was personally very active and agile. He was an expert wrestler. He would never, however, engage until the bully of the ring had thrown all others; then he would step in and throw the bully.

I have heard him say he never was thrown after he was twenty. He could jump higher than any person in his vicinity. He could leap over a line as high as his head. He was six feet in height, and generally weighed one hundred and eighty pounds. A principal reason that he did not appear more prominently in the world was his diffidence. When he was nominated for town-clerk, 'he said it occurred to him that he should have to read before the meeting, and he should not be able to eat or sleep on account of nervousness.' He always stood back, and never put himself forward as an office-seeker."

From what we have known of Mr. Gould, we confidently indorse the foregoing statements. He was a worthy citizen, and fulfilled honorably all his duties to the public, and the obligations incumbent upon him as a member of society.

We insert with pleasure the following extract from a letter just received from William C. Gould, Esq., of Bow :

“My father was born in Dunbarton, August 15, 1769. He died Feb. 1, 1852. His oldest diary in my possession dates back to 1820. He was that year Senator from District No. 3. He was emphatically a self-taught man, having had no advantages of education beyond his own fireside. His father was sternly opposed to any thing like progress, and my father had but little chance for improvement while under him. I have heard him say that he made shingles and bought a dictionary, but was obliged to peruse it secretly ; for his father had declared that the book would be the ruin of him. He once said ‘ that all his boys were good to work, and could take care of themselves except John, and he did not care for any thing but an old book.’ ”

As for the pamphlets he has written, I know of but few. He wrote a letter to Mr. Harris and Rev. Mr. Cowles ; also, one small pamphlet on the subject of capital punishment, about the time Daniel Farmer was hung at Amherst. He wrote several articles for the newspapers in defence of Universalism, which were published, but most of his writings never went to the press. My brother John died while a student at college, five years before I was born.

I have, since writing the above, learned that my grandfather was born in Hampton, Mass., in 1740, and my grandmother in Pittsfield, N. H., in 1743. My father wrote a pamphlet to the Shakers, the title of which I do not recollect.”

NOTE. In the description of Dumbarton Castle (page 39), Renfrew is mentioned as a royal burgh, classed with those of Dumbarton, Glasgow and Ruther Glen, in electing a member to the British Parliament.

“ Lord Renfrew ” is the title which Queen Victoria directed the Prince of Wales to assume during his travels in America.

APPENDIX.

ON the 30th of January, 1746, John Tufton Mason sold his interest in the Province to a company composed of the following gentlemen, viz :

“ Theodore Atkinson, Richard Wibird, John Moffat, Mark Hunking Wentworth, Samuel Moore, John Odiorne, Jr., Joshua Pierce, Nathaniel Meserve, George Jaffrey, Jr., John Wentworth, Jr., Thomas Wallingford, and Thomas Packer.”

To the above named persons, and the officers of government, lots were set apart in all granted townships.* The assent of the applicants being declared in regard to this arrangement, companies of respectable individuals experienced but little trouble in obtaining township grants.

A liberal allowance of farm lots was invariably bestowed upon the Governor, his Secretary, and Treasurer, or other friends by them designated, “to them and their heirs for ever.” The American Revolution, however, a convulsion unanticipated as well as unprecedented in the history of the world, “indefinitely postponed” many of these admirably contrived schemes for future wealth. Confiscation settled the account of many of these thus easily acquired grants of lands.

On this occasion the severed leg of one of the unfortunate men was thrown a distance of several rods with such force as to break through a door of the house occupied by Colonel Walbach, who commanded the garrison and the United States troops in that vicinity. Our informant is Mr. Thomas Lord, a veteran volunteer in the war of 1812-15.

IN another portion of this work is an allusion to the first saw-mill erected in this town, by General Stark, in 1760, who was encouraged in the undertaking by a grant of land (one hundred acres) from the lord proprietors.

To show the value of timber in those days, we refer to a deposition of Deacon John Church, the oldest person except one who ever died in this town. He was 97, Mrs. Joseph Leach being 102.

In reference to the mill above named, he stated in substance that General Stark gave to himself and other settlers of the town permission to cut white pine timber on his (Stark's) land, to be sawed in his mill, for one half the lumber. Remnants of the noble trees of the primeval forest, felled in pursuance of this free leave grant to his fellow-citizens by the General, are still visible. One white pine, then growing upon his land, measured ten feet in diameter. The remains of its stump are still to be seen.
